IN THE BEE TO-DAY

WEATHER.

Department of Agriculture,
Weather Bureau,
Toledo, O., Nov.18,1892.

Owing to the high winds and gales which have been caused by the storm, telegraphic reports this morning are very incomplete, and stations reporting are so few that no map can be drawn.

From the reports received the follown synopsis is made: The storm central over Illinois yesterday morng has moved very rapidly northward and is now central over Lake Superior, having increased in energy and magnitude. Barometer being as low as 29.00 inches at the storm center. The storm will probably move eastward to-day and reach the North Atlantic coast by to-morrow morning. Reports received last night and this morning show that the entire country east of the Rocky mountains has been affected by this storm, and winds of from 30 to 70 miles per hour have been reported from lake stations. Gales will continue all to-day and on the Atlantic coast to-morrow.

The area of clearing conditions, with the cold wave, is advancing rapidly eastward and will cause the weather to clear here to-morrow. As reports from all western stations are missing, it will be impossible to predict how low the temperature will fall, but it will surely reach 25 degrees or lower.

Forecast for to-day: Cloudy weather with light flurries of snow; cold wave; westerly gales. On Saturday, probably fair and colder. E. A. HANNER, Observer.

Ten million pounds of tea were brought into the United States last year. This is an increase of nearly a third over the year before.

Look over these symptoms: headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat—sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. You won't have all of them at once; probably only a few of them; but they mean Catarrh.

And the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy mean to cure it, if you'll let them, no matter how bad or how long standing.

If they can't, they'll pay you $500 in cash. They mean that, too, just as it's printed.

They offer you the money—or a certain cure, if you'll take their medicine. But if they weren't certain of the cure, they'd never offer you the money.

ARGUING THE CASE

Manchester Trial Drawing to a Close.

The Taking of Evidence Concluded Yesterday.

Counsel Are Now Endeavoring to Impress the Jury.

The Evidence Only Carries Their Respective Points.

It Is Expected That the Case Will Be Given to the Jury in the Morning.

It will soon be all over.

Before the light of another day, the trial of Councilman B. O. Manchester, charged with soliciting a bribe to influence his official vote, will have been concluded.

The taking of evidence was concluded yesterday afternoon and this morning Attorneys Barber and Kinney closed their arguments.

The court room has been crowded all day, and all present have paid careful attention to the interesting talk to the jury.

This morning, after an argument of three-quarters of an hour, on the requests to charge, Mr. Barber began the opening argument for the state.

The prosecutor passed over the Neuendorf meeting, referring to it in brief.

Speaking of the club house meeting Mr. Barber said:

"Now we come to the club house meeting, which, you will remember, occurred on the afternoon of the Monday when the Pluto Oil ordinance came up in the council. This is an obstacle that I await with a great deal of interest to see how counsel for the defense will get over the point. In my opinion the defendant's statement as to what transpired at this meeting utterly annihilated his testimony. How about that meeting? It must have been of vast importance to take the lawyer from his law office, the flour and feed man from his store, the book-keeper from his books, and Mr. Manchester from his collecting. Did they all go out to that club house, assembled in that summer house, which is not larger than this jury box, and set there and look at each other blankly without saying a word? Is this reasonable, gentlemen? Did these men go out there and wander about those grounds aimlessly and without intent? What would take these men from their business if it was not self-interest? The defense does not deny that they were assembled in the summer house, and that he was with them; yet he testifies that he did not remember a single thing that was said or done.

"Now, Swain testifies that the Pluto Oil ordinance was discussed and that they agreed to stand and vote solidly against the Pluto ordinance. His testimony is corroborated by the records of the meeting of the city council held that very evening, which shows that every member of the council, who was at that club house meeting that afternoon, with the exception of Felker, voted solidly against the ordinance, as they agreed. The records show that the ordinance was laid on the table, by the same vote, and a recess taken until the next night, which takes us to the day of the interview with Tanner, Gill and Daly, at the Pluto oil office, where the solicitation of the bribe was made. The defense does not deny this interview in whole or in part, but merely endeavors to show that Manchester had no connection with it."

Mr. Barber then sketched over the interview and brought out points to show the solicitation of the combination.

Passing to the interview between Mr. Lorenz and the accused, Mr. Barber said: "I invite my friends on the other side, and I will stay in the room to hear them, and I insist that they accept the challenge, to take up this interview, word for word, sentence after sentence, of the whole interview with Manchester, and try to obliterate a corrupt intent, and try to reason with you that it was a mere defense, an apology for what other members of the council had said. He knew when he offered to vote for the ordinance through friendship for Tanner, that Tanner, Gill and Daly had offered to sell his vote and ten others for $5,500. By his very act of joining the combination and attending the various meetings, he raitfied the unlawful object and intent of this conspiracy."

Mr. Barber closed at 10 o'clock by reading the proposition of law, submitted to the court yesterday afternoon.

When Mr. Barber had concluded Mr. Kinney began the opening argument for the state. He stated that the state did not charge Mr. Manchester with having solicited a bribe for his vote, but that it was claimed that a combination or conspiracy of councilmen, for the purpose of soliciting a bribe, existed; that it becomes very important to prove that Mr. Manchester had any connection with this so-called conspiracy; that if a conspiracy did exist it must have been in life before June 21; that if a bribe was solicited it must have been solicited on June 21, and not on June 22; that it must be proven that B. O. Manchester was a member of a conspiracy organized to solicit $5,500 from the Pluto Oil company on June 21.

Mr. Kinney dwelt to some extent upon Mr. Manchester's good character and reputation in the community, which he stated the evidence showed had been unsullied by a whisper of suspicion up to the date of the charges made against him.

He endeavored to impress upon the jury the fact that no other man was on trial but B. O. Manchester, and that what had gone before should not have one iota of weight.

Referring to the state's effort to introduce evidence of the meetings of the combination, held prior to Mr. Manchester's being connected with it, Mr. Kinney stated that Mr. Barber in his argument to the court agreed that without this testimony it would be impossible to establish a conspiracy; that in his argument to the jury he said that the state had never made a stronger case. Mr. Kinney asked which statement expressed Mr. Barber's honest convictions.

"What evidence does the state introduce to prove a conspiracy?" continued Mr. Kinney. "Why, upon the statement of Ransom B. Swain, who confesses that he was a member from the first, worked with and remained with until he told all he knew to save himself. And the state asks you to place a stigma upon the name of a man who for more than 40 years has lived a life above reproach, upon the statements of this man."

As to the facts in the case, Mr. Kinney stated that the defense neither denied or admitted the existence of a conspiracy, but denied that B. O. Manchester was ever a member of any conspiracy; that they thought the evidence showed it, and they believed the jury would so find; that there was no evidence of a conspiracy or Mr. Manchester's connection with it, up to the 16th of June.

Mr. Kinney related how Mr. Manchester came to go to the first meeting, which has been stated in the report of the trial. He argued that there was nothing strange or unusual about the fact that Mr. Manchester attended this meeting. He argued that this was the important meeting in the case, for the reason that it was the only meeting which the state's evidence goes to show that a conspiracy did exist.

He called attention to Swain's testimony in the prescuse that he had, in the Daly case, told that had transpired at the first meeting which Manchester was present, and that he said he had told all, and then while he was confronted with a transcript the evidence he was compelled to backfie made an attack on the consistency Swain's testimony relative to taking Manchester into the alleged conspiracy; that no ceremony was exercised, no oath taken, no committal to secrecy. He argu that this was not the probable plan organization perfected to commit rime. He continued that if Manchester had gone to the stand to lie, why did he deny being present at Neuendorf's st? Why did he not deny the club houmeeting? Why did he not deny all excing the interview at Lorenz's office; that there was no one to dispute it but Swa

Mr. Kinney couded his argument, and was followed his colleague, Mr. Southard, in the closing argument for the defense.

Yesterday Afternn's Proceedings.

At 2 o'clock yerday afternoon, Mr. Tracy began the cr-examination of Mr. Manchester for the state.

"I understood yeto say that before coming to Toledo u taught school at Elkhart, Ind., and erwards in Toledo?"

"Yes, sir."

"I understand yoradied law?"

"I did."

"Were you admil to practice?"

"I was; yes, sir."

"You say the sidalk and street committees were in sesn on the night of the Neuendorf ming which you attended?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were other ofhese committees in session when you l?"

"I could not say

"Now, when youent to Neuendorf's store you went dirly away from the direction of your he did you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did Rutherford l you what he was going down to Neudorf's store for?"

"No, sir."

"What did he sa"

"He said, 'Come, alk down to Neuendorf's store with u'"

"When you arriv at the store where was the light?"

"It was either in e middle or office of the store."

"What part of thstore were the other members in when y arrived?"

"At the rear end."

"What was the fir thing said?"

"I asked what thewere doing."

"Who answered?"

"I believe Mr. Der."

"What did he say

"He said they we there talking over legislative matters."

"Had you seen . Daly over at the council chamber?"

"I do not rememk."

"Did you see Mr. ill?"

"I don't remembe"

"Did you see MrJoner?"

"I don't remember though I might have seen all of them."

"Now, Mr. Daly, a member of the sidewalk committee id if he was at that meeting, the meeti at the store could not have been very ar along when you got there."

"Well, I don't kn."

"Did Doner say ything more?" said Mr. Tracy.

"No, sir. Well, I think he did ask me how I stood on thstreet railway ordinance."

"What did you say'

"I told them."

"Was anything sd about the Pluto Oil ordinance?"

"Yes; Neuendorf id something about receiving an ofer of 25,000 in stock, and Tanner said that the could get 5,500 in cash."

"Did any one sa anything about accepting?"

"Not in my presen."

"Did they say the would not take it?"

"No, sir."

"Whom did you leve with?"

"I went alone."

"Why did you not o with Rutherford?"

"I am not his guadian."

"Quite true, but ou went there with him and on his invition?"

"Yes, sir."

"You said you genally went home with him?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why did you notwait for him on this occasion?"

"Well, I was anxias to get home."

"Was there anythig said about it being better to leave one a a time?"

"I don't think ther was."

Mr. Tracy then pased to the club house meeting.

"Mr. Manchester, while you were out at Fisher's club hoe did you not state that all of the members of the council out there were in the summer house at one time?"

"I do not think I id."

"You said that youwere all in the summer house when Ruherford arrived."

"Not all."

"Why was not in the summer house?"

"I don't know."

"Can you give usthe name of any one member who was not in the summer house?"

"Rutherford."

"Well, we knowthat Rutherford was standing at the dr. Were there any others not there?"

"I do not remember."

"Now, as to th interview with Mr. Lorenz, when he sid that Tanner had offered to pass the ordinance for $5,500, what did you do?"

"I said, 'Mr. Lorenz, that it a pretty hard statement to make against a councilman, and to a counilman, and that window open. Supposesome one should hear what you said.' He aid I could look out of the window."

"Did you look?"

"I did."

"What did you se?"

"The ground belo eight or ten feet."

"You did not see my one?"

"I did not."

Mr. Tracy then rad the interview and put it in the form of questions. Mr. Manchester endorsed the interview in part, placed a different construction on part and denied some. Passing to Mr. Manchester's closing statement, Mr. Tracy said:

"Did you or did you not say to Mr. Lorenz that you would vote for the ordinance out of friendship for Mr. Tanner?"

"I said that perhaps I would vote for it out of friendship for Tanner."

"Now when you nade that statement, you knew that Tanner had agreed to take $5,500 to pass that ordinance?"

"So Mr. Lorenz had stated."

"And you were wiling to help him out for friendship? If t was friendship for Mr. Tanner, why did you go and look out of the window to see that no one was around?"

"It was just that reason. I did not want him or any one else unjustly suspected."

When Mr. Tracy concluded the cross-examination of Manchester, the defense rested and the state called Messrs. Lorenz, Machen and Swain in rebuttal.

This was concluded at 4 o'clock. Before proceeding with the argument, a request to charge was submitted to the court by the state.

The request was submitted to settle several points of law as to a conspiracy for the pursuance of an unlawful object. Mr. Barber maintained that it was not necessary to prove that any meetings were held, so long as two or more persons began to operate together for an unlawful purpose; that it was only necessary to prove the defendant's connection with the combination, to hold him directly liable for every act and statement of the combination in pursuit of the common unlawful object.

The court stated that in his opion the request was a sound and logical proposition of law and would be given to the jury.

BOOMING CATLIN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Gen. I. S. Catlin this morning denied to a United Press reporter that he had been promised the appointment of commissioner of pensions as reported. He said he knew nothing of such a promise and was not even aware that his name had been mentioned for the place.

The costliness of strikes has been too often dwelt upon to mention the fact that a man slapped another citizen's face and had to pay $10 for it.

GOV. M'KINLEY.

He Speaks on the Recent Landslide.

Ohio Republicans Go on Record as Still in Favor of High Tariff.

Perhaps the saddest spectacle
This side the River Styx
Is he who sighs between his tears,
"Well—wait till '96."
—New York Herald.

Columbus, Nov. 18.—The executive committee of the Ohio Republican league met here yesterday for the purpose of settling campaign matters and deciding the date for holding the annual convention. February 14 was the date chosen. President W. I. Squire, Vice-President Case and Secretary McDonald were elected a committee on arrangements.

To the young men interested in the next campaign, it was suggested that an oratorical contest for a cash prize be one of the projects.

Gov. McKinley was escorted to the meeting and addressed those assembled. Said he:

"Mr. President and Gentlemen—I scarcely know what I ought to say but I feel like congratulating you that so soon after the fight you are on hand for the fray that is to come later. I do not think that any cause that is just is ever lost; all that we have to do, now that we have lost the election, is to get ready for the next fight. I am sure no republican who loves his country will lose courage. Your organization has done splendid work, and I am glad to find you thus early ready to co-operate with the state committee and with republicans generally, to carry on the work of the republican party. I can only say to you that anything I can do to make the work and the republican party successful and its principles triumphant, I shall be glad to do at any time."

At the conclusion of Gov. McKinley's little speech, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, It has been the declaration of the entire democratic press that the recent defeat of the republican party was brought about by the operation of the McKinley tariff law; and recognizing that result as the effect of other causes, therefore, be it Resolved, That we, the members of the executive committee of the Ohio Republican league, recognizing the untiring efforts of our own gallant governor, Wm. McKinley, jr., to bring about a national victory in 1892, upon the lines of protection, hereby renew our allegiance to those principles, and urge that the same shall be made the leading issue in the campaign of 1893, and we further, most enthusiastically, indorse his model administration as governor of this great state of Ohio."

The organization committee of the league will meet within the next ten days.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

A Warm Fight in the Memphis Meeting.

A New Ruling by the Chair Precipitated a Dispute—No Progress Made

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 18.—At 8:30 last night President Loucks called the Farmers' alliance convention to order and said that nominations for officers were in order and called Mann Page, of Virginia, to the chair.

Ex-Congressman Otis, of Kansas, placed Loucks in nomination for president, and Gen. A. M. Wert, of Mississippi, nominated Mr. Macune.

In former conventions if a delegate from a state or territory was absent, one delegate was permitted to cast the entire vote of that state.

The ruling of the chair was asked on this point and he ruled that a delegate was entitled to only one vote. The decision of the chair was appealed from, but two-thirds did not vote to reverse his ruling.

A motion was made to adjourn and he refused to entertain it, and an exciting scene ensued and pandemonium reigned until midnight, and at that hour there was no prospect of a solution of the trouble.

Page is a supporter of Loucks and the delegate from Florida who brought up the question is a friend of Macune. Several delegates were on the point of coming to blows. At 1:10 a. m. a motion to adjourn prevailed. The fight will be resumed to-day.

SHE PANTS FOR OFFICE.

Mrs. Lease Would Like To Be a Senator.

Anything to Beat Jerry Simpson or a Democrat—An Interesting Fight.

New York, Nov. 18.—A special to the Press from Topeka, Ks., says the populists and democrats are getting wider apart over the senatorial squabble.

Judge John Martin wants the position but the information that he received yesterday that there were 35 populist members who will stand with Mrs. Lease in the middle of the road and against any democrat, discouraged him.

Whether these 35 will vote for Mrs. Lease is unknown, but she will have a great influence with them and to prevent them going to Jerry Simpson or a democrat she will be a candidate herself.

When she was asked if it was possible for her to get enough votes she said:

"Anything is possible with God and the farmers of Kansas."

A. L. Williams, of the Union Pacific railroad, said yesterday: "I see no reason why Mrs. Lease should not be a senator. There is nothing to prevent it but the popular idea that a senator should be a man. I hope she will be elected. She would keep the senators pretty busy if they sent her to Washington."

WORKING UP A CASE.

Chawley Mitchell and His Corbett Fight.

The Blooming Britisher Says He Will Go After the American Champion.

St. Louis, Nov. 18.—Tom Allen, retired champion of the world, who keeps a saloon on Market street, has received a letter from Charley Mitchell dated at London, November 7. Mitchell says: I am sure to fight Corbett, as you know, Tom, unless he pulls out. I shall be better, stronger and bigger when I face him than I have ever been in my life, and, between you and me, I am very sanguine as to my success. Now, you ask me on the frank what I think of Corbett. I fancy Corbett very much, but keep that to yourself. They think I am fat and done with, but there will be a surprise party for them in 10 rounds, I am certain.

Mitchell's recent bout with her majesty's law, in which he was accused of committing an unwarranted assault on one George Solvage, an old man, is referred to in his letter to Allen, and his version of the affair is entirely different from the reports cabled to America. Mitchell says that in company with some friends, while making a night of it in London, he and his party were assaulted by a party of thugs in an alley off a side street. "Chawley" fought the assaulting party to a standstill, and Solvage, who was one of them, was knocked down and badly smashed in the face in the scuffle. The entire party was arrested, and Solvage, on discovering that Mitchell was the man who had put the face on him, lodged complaint of assault to kill against the prizefighter.

HEAVY LOSS.

Fifty Thousand Dollars Goes Up in Smoke.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 18.—At 2:45 o'clock this morning fire started in the four-story building at 419 North Fourth street, occupied by Hirschel & Bendheim, wholesale cigar dealers.

The fire spread to the adjoining building, No. 421 North Fourth street, occupied by the American Oak Leather company.

By hard work the fire was gotten under control after having caused a loss of $50,000, fully insured. No. 417 North Fourth street, occupied by Brooks Brothers, wholesale jewelers, was also damaged several thousand dollars' worth.

WANT MORE MONEY.

Telegraph Operators Propose to Strike.

They Ask for an Advance Amounting to Seven Dollars a Month.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 18.—The order of Railway Telegraphers has announced that unless the Queen & Crescent and East Tennessee & Georgia railways comply with their demands for an increase in wages, equal to about $7 per month for each man, by Tuesday, the entire number of operators employed by these roads will walk out and a general strike will be declared.

This means that 1,800 men will open their keys and that the "os" will not tick over the wires unless the roads take immediate action to supply their places. 1

THIS WILL BE CHEERING

News to Many American Navigators.

Newly Registered Boats Will Have Their Foreign Crews Naturalized.

New York, Nov. 18.—Capt. Frederick A. Watkins, of the Inman Line racer City of Paris, is to become an American citizen. So is Capt. Lewis, of her sister ship, the City of New York.

Both vessels have received American registers by special act of congress. As the veteran commanders cannot be naturalized immediately they will be placed in charge of two fast freight steamers now being constructed on the Clyde for the Inman line.

When they become full-fledged American citizens Captains Watkins and Lewis will be restored to their former commands or assigned to the new racers which have been contracted for.

THEY GO FREE.

Twenty Convicts in the Ohio Penitentiary.

Held There Under the Habitual Criminal Law—Supreme Court Rulings.

Columbus, O., Nov. 18.—The supreme court after hearing the statement of the case of William Hiser, a prisoner from Licking county, who is held under the habitual criminal act, ordered his release without leaving the bench. Hiser was not convicted under this act, and the warden held the prisoner after expiration of his sentence simply because he discovered by the records that he was serving his third term.

Attorney General Richards, who was present, said to the court that if the warden had asked him for an opinion he would have advised him to let Hiser go. There are about 20 prisoners who will go out on this decision.

In the absence of Chief Justice Spear, Hon. C. J. Dickman presided. A number of important motions were argued. Hon. Charles Grosvenor and G. M. McGullivay appeared in behalf of Wooweaver, the Vinton county murderer, who recently applied for admission to the penitentiary to deprive Sheriff Jennings of his fees. The attorneys are endeavoring to get the case out of the Vinton county courts, where Sheriff Jennings will secure heavier sentence for the prisoner in punishment for running away.

The Lake county motions were next heard. The first was that of Robert N. Traver, the editor of the Lake County Advertiser. During the campaign of last year Traver endeavored to defeat Howard Harper, the candidate for re-election as prosecuting attorney. Harper entered the job office of the Advertiser and carried away some campaign literature, for which Traver branded him as a "thief." Prosecution followed and Traver was fined $200 and sentenced to 60 days in jail. Sentence was suspended to give him an opportunity to carry the case into the higher courts.

John H. Jones against the state of Ohio was the title of the other Lake county case. Jones was convicted on four counts for selling liquor to habitual drunkards. The fines aggregated $1,200 and the sentence 120 days in jail. If the fine had to be worked out Jones would spend three years in jail. His attorney, Geo. W. Alvord, argued that it was doubtful if in the meaning of the statutes these men to whom he sold liquor were habitual drunkards. Motion was also made to advance the Iden-Gammer contest case.

CORBETT.

He Is Still Anxious to Fight English Chawley.

New York, Nov. 18.—Charley Mitchell has been airing his views in the newspapers lately with regard to Corbett and the American championship. In the Philadelphia Press yesterday Jim fired some pretty hot shot at England's boxing champion. Among other things he said: "Mitchell is the man I most desire to meet and should we come together, if it is in me, I'll thrash the bully soundly. He is such an untruthful bluffer that I doubt if he could be pulled into a ring with me.

"When I get ready to fight I have no doubt a suitable purse will be offered. I am not losing any sleep through fear of that kind. If, under the present circumstances, I have to break off my theatrical engagements to take part in a fight in February or March for the sake of trying to win a big purse I would very much resemble the man who, in eating dinner, takes his dessert first for fear he won't get any if he waits. I am doing quite well now and won't disturb present arrangements for the sake of fighting for a purse that will be forthcoming just as promptly in September as in March. In other words, I will enjoy the dinner now and take dessert afterward.

"Of the whole lot," said the champion, in conclusion, "I respect Peter Jackson most, for he is a very sensible, gentlemanly chap and a tip-top pugilist."

Seven million pounds of California fruit were sold in New York city last year.

OHIO NOT ALL IN YET

But Enough is Known to Satisfy People

That Republicans Had a Narrow Escape.

Lucas County's Official Returns Have Not Arrived at the Capital.

Columbus, O., Nov. 18.—Official returns from nearly all the counties have been received at the office of Secretary of State Poorman, and it is now possible to make a very close estimate of the individual plurality of each successful candidate at the recent election. All the counties have been heard from officially excepting Fayette, Franklin, Guernsey, Lawrence, Lucas and Starke. Counting the official vote of the counties now and the semi-official reports on electors and secretary of state, and assuming that the other candidates ran about the same as reported on electors.

The pluralities are as follow:

Secretary of state—
S. M. Taylor, Rep.	966
Judge of the supreme court, long term—
Wm. T. Spear, Rep.	1624
Judge of the supreme court, short term—
Jacob F. Burkett, Rep.	1390
Clerk of supreme court—
Josiah B. Allen, Rep.	1506
Member of board of public works—
Edward L. Lybarger	1724
Presidential electors—
Danford, Rep., over Seward, Dem.	993
Danford over other republican electoral candidates	2292
Average republican plurality on the electoral ticket	1097
Seward over the average republican plurality	1299
Seward over other democratic electoral candidates	2380

The Fayette county muddle reached the supreme court. The attorneys for the republicans made application for a peremptory writ of mandamus compelling the democratic members of the county board of election supervisors to certify the election of Judge Shearer to the secretary of state on the face of the returns. The court refused to grant a peremptory writ of mandamus, but did allow an alternative writ, returnable at 10 o'clock a. m. next Monday. This writ commands the democratic supervisors to either certify the election as desired by the republicans or to appear in court and show cause why they refuse to do so.

This action will bring the case before the courts on its merits, and all questions involved in the controversy will be considered.

SALARIES CUT.

Ball Players Will Have No Snap Next Year.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—There was a solid, business-like aspect about the League meeting.

The magnates put in a whole afternoon of hard, downright work. They didn't take time to visit the bar, but behind closed doors kept up a steady grind.

Figuratively speaking, they were sharpening their axes and whetting their swords for an attack on the salary evil.

The much-advertised "chop all along the line" is on. Captain Comiskey aptly remarked to-day that ball players who had in the past put away their nest-egg for the proverbially rainy day were in luck, for they would never again have the opportunity.

"From now on it will be a case of good living salaries, with nothing for savings banks or poker games," said Commie.

FIELD TO RESIGN.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 18.—The Evening Telegram publishes a statement that Justice Stephen J. Field, of the United States supreme court, will retire before the expiration of President Harrison's term and will be succeeded by Senator J. N. Dolph.

WORKMEN'S PARLIAMENT.

The Central Labor Union Actively Alive.

Last night occurred the regular meeting of the Central Labor union, and in spite of the wet weather there was a good attendance of delegates from the different federated organizations. H. E. Wells appeared as representative af Toledo lodge No. 105, International Association of Machinists, and Wm. Zimmerman and C. Schmidt as delegates from the Furniture Workers' union, which is taking on new life after a period of depression.

A report was heard from the committee appointed to aid in the collection from business men of this city of aid for the Homestead strikers. The amount received in this way was somewhat disappointing, being no larger than the donation of the Central Labor union; but those who showed their good will toward organized labor in contributing, will not be forgotten by the union men of Toledo.

Report of the committee on open meeting showed all ready for the entertainment of music, speeches and recitations in Memorial hall next Tuesday evening. The speakers are assured and the clergy of the city all invited to seats on the platform.

A proposition to put out over the building in which the meetings are held a flag bearing the words, "Central Labor Union," was agreed to.

Hearing was given to Mr. Braunschweiger, organizer of the Furniture Workers' union, who has been resuscitating the Toledo union, with good success. He spoke in German, and appealed for aid to the striking furniture workers of Cincinnati, and $50 was voted.

Work and Workers.

The Free Employment Bureau reports that for the week ending November 17, there were 81 applications for servants, the wants including 28 male and 53 female workers. Ninety persons wanted work, 45 males and 45 females, and situations were secured for 45, of whom 19 were males and 26 females.

Blank credentials were received for delegates to the Ohio State Trade and Labor assembly, and the union will probably send representatives to the convention to be held at Columbus on January 3.

Following is the list of local unions in Toledo that have voted aid to the Homestead strikers:

Carpenters, $25; Painters and Decorators, $10 a month till the strike is settled, if it takes ten years; Glass Cutters, $25; Brewers, $50 and 25 cents a week on every member till the strike is settled; Machinists, $10 a month; Furniture Workers, $5; Brewery Drivers, $20; Glass Blowers, $65.50; Metal Polishers, $75. It was announced that the National Glass Cutters' association had given $2,500.

Carpenters' Union, No. 475.

The charter for the new Carpenters' union on the East Side, arrived this morning. The organization has been postponed till Saturday of next week on account of the democratic jollification to-morrow night.

It is estimated that in Paris one person in every 18 is a criminal.

ELKS AND LADIES

Join in a Very Social Session,

Enjoy a Banquet, Music and Toasts

At Odd Fellows' Temple Last Evening—Over Two Hundred Guests Present—A Most Enjoyable Affair.

Coming so soon after the great political struggle, the social session of the Elks last evening, combined with the softening influence of the ladies presence, acted as a sort of panacea to all the ills contracted and digs given during the fray. The banqueters forgot that they were democrats and republicans and only remembered that they were brothers. James H. Southard, during his remarks, said "some of us are eating crow. This is all very proper. Perhaps next time some one else may be eating the bird. However, we don't complain."

It was one of the most enjoyable banquets that has ever been given in this city. Over two hundred ladies and gentlemen were seated at the tables which were arranged in the shape of a letter E.

Odd Fellows hall was transformed with flowers, palms and festoonings of green. Elks' heads formed a principal part of the decorations, and one mammoth stag overlooked the table from behind the chair of Exalted Ruler Wm. V. McMacken.

Among the ladies present were Mrs. Milo Melchers, Mrs. C. M. Dedrick, Misses Ella and Grace Conlisk, Mrs. A. A. Machen, Mrs. B. F. Ritchie, Mrs. W. A. Gashe, Mrs. Henry L. Lorenz, Mrs. Geo. E. Lorenz, Mrs. J. A. McLaughlin, Mrs. R. J. Wallace, Miss Wallace, Mrs. W. A. Tenney, Miss Jessie Barnum, Mrs. Geo. P. Alter, Mrs. W. S. Stackhouse, Mrs. Gus Leibius, Mrs. J. C. Huber, Mrs. Wm. Couldwell, Miss May Fenell, Mrs. M. C. Sullivan, Mrs. H. I. Monroe, Mrs. Lewis Strasburger, Mrs. S. A. Lasalle, Mrs. S. C. Noft, Mrs. J. J. Stone, Mrs. Perry W. Werden, Mrs. Walter Emery, Miss Hattie De Lude, Miss Anna McBain, Mrs. F. M. Sala, Mrs. E. M. McBain, Mrs. Thos. Watters, Miss Lucy Gruber, Mrs. H. J. Bower, Mrs. C. F. Wall, Mrs. C. L. Chapman, Mrs. L. A. Cole, Miss Cole, Mrs. C. S. Webber, Miss McAleer, Mrs. P. A. Breman, Mrs. W. V. McMacken, Miss Agnes Wright, Miss Mary Wright, Mrs. Chas. Stager, Mrs. A. W. Machen, Mrs. J. P. Bronson, Mrs. Robt. Parke, Mrs. W. M. Bellman, Mrs. C. N. Bellman, Mrs. H. S. Thornton, Mrs. Chas. Hanner, Mrs. F. C. Flanagan, Mrs. E. M. Harley, Miss Pearl Wilson, Miss Fournier, Miss Alter, Mrs. Edward O'Dwyer, and Mrs. Charles Seymour.

After the repast Toastmaster Wm. V. McMacken welcomed the sister Elks heartily. He hoped it would be the forerunner of many like occasions. He hoped also that the ladies would go away with good impression of the Elks, and that when a brother came home late from lodge hereafter they would be forgiven.

F. E. Wright was called upon to respond to the toast, The Grand Lodge, and he did so nobly.

He thought that while speaking of the grand lodge it would not be amiss to remark that the Toledo lodge was the grandest lodge of all. Of course all Toledoans agree with Mr. Wright, but other cities might dissent. The speaker told how the first lodge was organized in 1869 by a few actors and literary men in New York. "It is a mistaken idea," he said, "that the Elks are all theatrical people. Our membership springs from all walks of life, but the original idea was that it would be made up of theatrical and literary people and those in sympathy with them."

There seems to be a great many sympathizers.

"The toast, 'Our Order and Its Social Features,' by Brother Byron F. Ritchie," said the toastmaster. The words had scarcely passed his lips when the applause broke forth. It was an ovation. It died away only to break forth with renewed vigor when Mr. Ritchie tried to speak. Mr. Ritchie commenced by saying that he was wholly unprepared to say anything, at which he drew from his inner pocket a roll at least fifteen feet long. It created a big laugh. His remrks were listened to attentively. Closing, he said, "Ladies, with all your faults we love you still, and after lodge the stiller you are the more we love you."

In the forced absence of L. G. Richardson the toast, "The Ladies," was responded to by Andrew Farquahrson.

D. H. Commager toaster the past exalted rulers. He paid a glowing tribute to the late James M. Heustin and touched lightly on the virtues of the living, Messrs. B. F. Wade, L. G. Richardson, J. H. Southard, Bert Cole and Wm. V. McMaken. Said he: "You can see of what material our exalted rulers have been made in the past, and looking about you can see that we have the creme de la creme of the city to choose from in the future. We have the triumphant leader of a successful democracy (referring to Mr. Ritchie) and the lion-hearted leader of the hopeful republicans," nodding at Mr. Kent Hamilton.

The last-named gentleman followed, taking for his toast the Elks' motto, a beautiful on "The faults of our brothers we write upon the sand, their virtues upon the tablet of love and memory." He said he could not amplify the meaning of the words without dulling their force or marring their beauty, but he went right ahead and did so. His toast was one of the best of the evening.

J. H. Southard responded to "53," the number of the lodge. "The personnel is not an ordinary one," he said. "It contains rich and poor, but none so poor that they would not share their last dollar with a brother in want. We have congressmen-elect, senators, judges, ex-judges, chiefs, commissioners, doctors, lawyers, merchants and those who would not refuse postmasterships or the office of collector of customs, but I will not dwell on that. 53 is constantly growing and taking in the best material in the city."

Mayor Emmick toasted the city and made a great speech, in fact, did himself proud. Dr. H. I. Monroe read a well-written original paper, entitled, "How Are You?" after which ladies and gentlemen joined hands and sang Auld Lang Syne in true Elk fashion.

The following committees had the session in charge: On arrangements, Harry I. Monroe, George Moore, Charles Stager, Byron F. Ritchie, and Bert Cole; reception committee, Chris. F. Wall, Frank Stager, Ernest A. Eevrsman, Robert Parks, and Thomas F. Watters.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

Progress of the St. Louis Annual Meeting.

Probable That Powderly and Hayes Will Be Retained in Office.

St. Louis, Nov. 18.—Consideration of the various features of the address of General Masterworkman Powderly to the general assembly of the Knights of Labor was to-day taken up by special committees of that body.

More than ordinary interest will attach to the reports made upon that portion of the address dealing with the question of foreign immigration. A portion of the membership of the organization has always been opposed to Mr. Powderly's views upon this question, and the bold stand he has again taken and the vigorous language used by him yesterday, especially in laying down the proposition that all non-self-sustaining immigrants should be excluded has created something of a sensation. It is understood that the general assembly will withdraw from the alliance with Miner's Progressive association, as recommended by Mr. Powderly, and that it will also add a compulsory beneficial branch to the order.

The special committee on initiative and referendum will report an amendment to the constitution by which all local assemblies will be required to votes for those whom they would prefer as general officers, the result of such a vote to be binding upon future general assemblies.

Resolutions will also be adopted favoring the passage of election laws which will render it impossible for any person to vote unless he can read his ballot. The recommendation of Mr. Powderly that the general assembly should hereafter hold its conventions concurrent with those of the farmers' alliance meets with considerable favor, but it is not likely to be put into effect for a couple of years, as a large number of the delegates are in favor of holding the next general assembly in Chicago during the world's fair.

Talks with the delegates indicate that Mr. Powderly, together with Secretary-Treasurer John W. Hayes, will be re-elected unanimously. The committee on constitution is in session to-day. Numerous changes in the organic law are favored.

CHIEF OF POLICE WEIR.

No Doubt But That He Was Poisoned.

Report Made by the Chemist—Mrs. Marsh To Be Prosecuted.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 17.—There is now no doubt that Gamble Weir, the late superintendent of police of this city, was poisoned.

Hugo Blanck, the chemical expert, has completed his analysis of the dead man's stomach and states positively that he has found three different poisons in sufficient quantities to cause death.

Prof. Blanck finished his work yesterday and last evening made a full, but verbal report to W. D. Moore, and County Commissioner James G. Weir, brother of the deceased. He is now preparing a report in writing and will present it to District Attorney Burleigh and Administrator Fuhl within a few days.

Col. W. D. Moore has been retained by Administrator Fuhl and will assist District Attorney Burleigh in the prosecution of Mrs. March, with whom Supt. Weir boarded, and at whose residence he died of mysterious ailments, on the charge of larceny, the accusation, as is well known, being that she appropriated valuable personal rpoperty of the deceased.

The trial has not yet been placed on the list, but is expected to come up soon. It will likely be sensational as developments that may throw some light on the manner of death are expected. Mrs. Marsh's movements after she left Pittsburg were closely watched. As a result two women who reside at Tottenville, Staten Island, where Mrs. Marsh was arrested, are now in the city, and will appear as witnesses for the commonwealth when the case comes to trial.

PATRONS OF INDUSTRY.

Fostoria, O., Nov. 18.—The merchants of Fostoria are confronting the possibility of another Patrons of Industry crusade, conducted upon a different system from their co-operative plan of a few years ago. An organizer from Pennsylvania has been at work with them for some time and is now submitting contracts to local merchants to throw the entire farmer trade to the representatives of different lines who will contract to sell them goods at 10 per cent. above first cost. Nearly all of the merchants are indignant at the move and the few who are regarding it with favor are regarding it only with selfish motives. They are handling it gingerly, fearing that it will prove a boomerang in the end.

NEWS FROM NEW YORK.

Speculations on Cabinet Positions.

Carl Schurz and Dana Are Neither Liable To Be Among the Chosen.

New York, Nov. 16.—(Special Correspondence)—Many and varied are the retospections and prospections of both democrats and republicans on the astonishing results of the recent political cyclone.

There are surprisingly few knowledgeous gentlemen who flippantly assert the oft repeated expression of "I told you so." Most all prefer candidly to admit that their surprise is only equaled by their intense gratification, and those who have been laboring most assiduously for the extirpation of plutocratic republicanism and its concomitant coterie of discriminating heresies, congratulate themselves upon the fact that the verdict was so astounding as to leave no doubt as to the full appreciation by the people of the enormity of the error.

Retrospectively considered how strange it appears that any considerable portion of the American people could at this day support such a system as protection to the classes which inevitably must result in destruction to the masses.

More extraordinary still is the reflection that certain brainy men and many reputable citizens actually supported the tyrannous force bill which would have effectually suppressed republican institutions together with all the liberty that the name implies. However, be the reasons cogent or ridiculous, for the future, protection as advocated by the vanquished plutocrats who supported Mr. Harrison, is dead, dead, dead.

Many articles are now appearing in plutocratic prints to the effect that the victors are afraid to legislate in a manner conformable to the recent Chicago platform; rather they seek consolation and endeavor to produce the impression that they have secured it in saying that the democrats are distrustful of their own propositions. Truly drowning men will grasp at straws. If the senate will not between December and March consent to some modification of the McKinley abortion against which the people have proclaimed in such thundering tones, then it will be but reasonable and proper that Mr. Cleveland should call an extra session of congress to take such conservative steps in the direction of relief as may seem most appropriate to the incoming government.

It can be no detriment to the business interests of the country to remove from certain kinds of raw material all importation tax and generally to adjust all duties to a strict revenue basis.

Efforts hoping to create alarm are also current in the statements of the plutocrats that mines, mills and furnaces are soon to be extinguished never to be relighted until they are again placed at the head of the government. What utter nonsense—what useless bosh!

The cabinet makers are also busy constructing for Mr. Cleveland an article of furniture in the line which is supposed to be in every way superior to anything that he can possibly create for himself, notwithstanding the fact that he is not a tyro in the business, and has the well earned reputation of exercising his individual opinions and preferences on matters of public and general concern. There is every reason to suppose that if he will accept the position, Mr. Wm. Whitney will become the American premier and well will he grace this honorable post. It is not probable that New York will receive, as during Mr. Cleveland's last administration, two cabinet portfolios, and should Mr. Whitney accept the premiership the treasury will in all probability go to some southern or western man.

For reasons perhaps not well grounded, it has apparently become almost an unwritten law or at least a very general preference that the head of the department of finance should come from the Empire state. This results perhaps from the fact that where large sums of money are handled, the best agents or manipulators are most often found.

For this reason Mr. Whitney might better fit the treasury than the department of state.

The general impression prevails that Hon. Thos. Bayard, Mr. Cleveland's last premier, was not a success at the head of the cabinet, but such errors as he is supposed to have committed might just as likely have befallen any other man.

His four years' training beyond doubt added to his experience and, for dignity, statesmanship and force, Mr. Bayard has no superior. If, therefore, he was again made premier and Mr. Whitney secretary of the treasury, there would be two very important positions filled by two most creditable men. The Hon. John G. Carlisle would make a most excellent attorney general. Mr. Harrity, of Pennsylvania the force and efficiency of whose detailed management of the executive committee undoubtedly contributed largely to the sweeping democratic success, would make a most forcible and worthy postmaster general. Mr. James Campbell, of Ohio, would grace the position of secretary of the interior. Gen. Palmer, of Illinois, could not be improved on as secretary of war.

This selection would give New York one member, the west two, the middle states two and Pennsylvania one.

Mr. Horace Boies, of Iowa, might be an excellent man for secretary of agriculture to succeed the amiable and popular Jeremiah Rusk, and the far west or the south might supply the secretary of the navy without any conflict with geographical consideration of territorial lines. If the people and not the president were the choosers of the cabinet there might be more reason for this continuous discussion of the availability of candidates, but as it is, it is useless to volunteer advice.

Considerable discussion has developed regarding the selection of the Hon. Carl Schurz to be senator to succeed Mr. Hiscock.

In many respects Mr. Schurz would be a most forcible representative, and his support of democracy has been continuous and effective since the question most prominent in politics has been tariff reform.

Mr. Schurz is aggressive and formidable, as was illustrated by his attacks on the Grant administration and policy while senator from Missouri. He is an out and out tariff reformer, and the cause of pure government would be well subserved by his selection by the democratic legislature for this honorable post. It is most likely, however, that some democrat of longer standing in the party will be chosen. Again, Mr. Dana, the Sun, is being suggested for the position, but his views on the tariff are closer to those of Henry Clay in 1832 than Grover Cleveland in 1892. Mr. Dana, however, is a democrat with brains albeit his teeth. He would fill a senator's chair; not rattle around in it as has been the invariable practice of the men from whom he would succeed.

Mr. Dana and the hon. David B. Hill are thoroughly in accord on most questions of vital concern and the extensive information possessed by both as regards all questions likely to be brought before the senate in the next four years would no doubt place the state of New York in a more prominent position on the floor of that assembly than has ever been attained in the last generation.

The banquet given by the Chamber of Commerce of New York, at which Mr. Cleveland was present and of which organization he is an honorary member, resulted in bringing close between the "egg and the apple," or vixt the beginning and the ending of a sumptuous repast, many felicitous and interesting expressions regarding the effects to the business interests of a change federal policy.

Mr. Cleveland's assurance that "he would never allow himself to be heedless or indifferent to the favors you so worthily hold in your keeping" is not only compendious and forcible but is a full and sufficient guarantee that nothing shall with his approval be done that will in any way hamper or depress the industries of the country. He must, however, disregard the fact that the people elected him to the president, not because they desired a continuance of present conditions, but because they seek their speediest practical remedy. Another class of reformers, to wit, the single tax men—Henry George, et al—had at their banquet quite a number of speakers who in their joy and exuberance claimed that the victory was not to the democrats, but to themselves; that the people not only opposed protection, but opposed the custom house; that they were in favor of taxation on the land for the reason that the land grows corn, corn makes whisky and whisky pays taxes. Why not, therefore, catch the coon as he starts to run and tax the land exclusively? To men who own the land are better able, they say, to stand all the tax burden than those who owns stocks, bonds and other kinds of personality, and since the land represents in value only about one-third the whole, the farmer would only be required to pay about three times his present tax to relieve from assessment all other kinds of property. In other words, the scheme appears to possess the merit of utterly relieving the Goulds, Huntingtons and Vanderbilts and of placing upon the own-trodden farmer all the burdens of governmental support and pension extravagance. Arguments in its support are like that of the distinguished individual who said: "No cat has two tails, my cat has one tail more than no cat, hence my cat has three tails." Rather, if the struggling land owner were subjected to three times his present tax he would soon become a Vanderbilt, and tramps would become landlords. And yet these same men argue to themselves and their phantomution the victory of November 8. Nothing could be more absurd except the plutocratic cry that the country is going to the eternal bow-wows. The victory signifies progress, and is the verdict of the people against monopoly and usurpation, consentration and tyranny.

A John Bull Has Invaded the French Country and Obtained Valuable Secrets.

London, Nov. 18.—The relations between this government and that of France are likely to experience something of a tension as a result of the development that, through the intermediary services of a spy, the war office has secured a full description, together with drawings of the new French gun which is now under construction at the government works at Cherbourg.

The new armament is said to be endowed with terrific power, so that when charged with Melenite it is claimed by the French gunners that they will be in a position to bombard Dover and the coast adjacent from the safe distance Calais.

The government has also secured plans of the railway by which it is designed to ship the gun from point to point along the northwest coast of France. The name of the intermediary who took the risk of invading the French works and obtaining the information has not transpired.

WHO KILLED BROWN?

The Trial in Full Blast in Bryan.

What the State Expects to Prove.

The Defense Will Be Made on the Grounds of a Well Substantiated Alibi.

Bryan, Nov. 18.—The trial of Birchell is now on in earnest. The jury has been secured, the witnesses sworn, and Judge Snook has settled down for a long siege. As the days have drifted on it is the more evident that the trial will last many days. The completed jury is as follws:

John Greak, Thomas Crawfod, Ira Thomas, John Baird, Horace Snow, Joseph Shultz, Andrew Irwin, James Close, J. L. Wineland, A. J. Calvin, Jason W. Town and Henry Cook.

Judge Bowersox stated the case to the jury on behalf of the state. The indictment contains two counts, the first being that George Birchell did make an assault upon one Arthur Brown and with bottles and pieces of wood did beat and kill him.

The second count alleged that this was done for the purpose of robbery.

The circumstances of the case, as related by Judge Bowersox, were the same as already printed. He told who Brown was and stated that a few days before the 4th day of last May Brown had received a sum of money as a legacy. He had this money in the form of a roll of bills, which he exhibited on that day. He was seen to have it while in the company of George Birchell, and was seen to go to the armory with Birchell, and the latter was heard to dissuade him. The two then left the armory, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock in the evening, and were seen to go past Arnold's livery barn and go back of it to where Brown's body was afterwards found.

Judge Bowersox then created something of a sensation by stating that they would introduce witnesses who saw the struggle bewteen Birchell and Brown, and who saw Birchell beat Brown with a beer bottle, afterward rob him and then beat him again while prostrate on the ground. Also that Birchell left Brown on the ground, but soon after returned, and while Brown was writhing on the ground Birchell beat his head to a jelly with a stick of firewood.

This, Judge Bowersox said, was what the state expected to prove, and he thought they could do it conclusively.

Attorney Scott then took the floor on behalf of Birchell, the defendant and made his statement to the jury. He also reviewed the indictment, but said that while some of the things stated could be shown and would not be disputed, yet facts would also be presented which would show that while somebody did murder Arthur Brown, that person was not Geo. Birchell. "You will hear many strange and mysterious things in this trial," said Mr. Scott, "but the evidence against the defendant is entirely circumstantial. The evidence will show that Arthur Brown had a sum of money, but it will also show that this sum of money did not exceed $90.

"This same evidence will fail to show that George Birchell did go with Arthur Brown in the direction stated by Judge Bowersox. The evidence will show that a day or so before this sad occurrence, Arthur Brown went to Defiance with two men, residents of this city, and he had with him this money, that was left to him from his uncle's estate.

"These men returned the next day, and the evidence will show that on the evening of May 4 Arthur Brown was in Whitehead's saloon, where there was a large crowd congregated, and that Brown made a reckless display of his money. But the evidence will fail to show one circumstance that will implicate George Birchell in this killing of Brown.

"The evidence will show just where George Birchell was about town on that evening, and it will be proven that at the very time some inhuman wretch was taking the life of Arthur Brown, that Birchell was at home in bed. He returned home with his brother and was seen to do so by perfectly reputable witnesses. They arrived at home at exactly 9:30, went immediately to bed and did not rise until the next morning.

"On the next morning George Birchell, not murderer like, but man like, went from his home to his place of business, and on his way there learned of this crime. Man like he then viewed the scene. Afterward he was arrested on suspicion, and for over six months has been kept in jail under guard and the guilty ones have fled."

New York, Nov. 18.—It is thought that the conference of Catholic archbishops, which has been in session in this city for several days, will come to an end this evening, or to-morrow. No official announcement of the proceedings or the resolutions adopted will, according to one of the participants, be made until it has been reviewed at Rome. It is understood that as a result of the conference active measures will be inaugurated in the direction of making the Catholic educational exhibit at the world's fair as perfect in every respect as that of the government. The action of the conference on the question of secret societies will be awaited with something more than interest, especially in view of the fact that it was said not many days ago by a prominent ecclesiastic that before very many months a papal encyclical will be issued under which communicants in the Catholic church will be permitted to affiliate themselves with any of the secret societies, save only the Masonic fraternity.

THE TOLEDO CLUB

To Limit Its Membership to Three Hundred.

Chas. Reynolds Will Probably be the Next President of the Organization.

The Toledo club is on the boom.

The membership now is 295, and a movement is on foot to limit the membership to 300, and at the annual meeting in January this step will undoubtedly be taken.

Mr. John B. Ketcham, the president of the club, being obliged to divide his time between Toledo and Chicago, will not accept a re-election, and Mr. Chas. Reynolds will probably be his successor.

Next to Mr. Ketcham, Mr. Reynolds has been the chief promoter and hardest worker of the club and he will fill the office of president to the queen's taste.

BRUTAL PRIZE FIGHT.

Charles Turner and Billy Williams Fight.

It Was a Lightweight Battle, but Was Most Ferociously Contested.

San Francisco, Nov. 18.—At least 5,000 people assembled at the Pacific Athletic club last night to witness the fight to a finish between Charles Turner, colored, a local champion, and Billy Williams, of Salt Lake. Both men weighed under 104 pounds. The purse was $2,000. In the sixth round Williams punched Turner all around the ring. Just before time was called Turner's seconds rushed into the ring and carried their man out. Williams kept punching Turner during the seventh round, but had not strength enough to knock him out. Turner clinched all through the eighth. Toward the end of the round both fell from exhaustion. The ninth was a walking round. Turner was knocked down three times in the tenth and failed to come to time. The referee gave the fight to Williams.

BICYCLES ON THE BOOM.

The Yost Manufacturing Company in Luck.

An Eastern Concern Agrees to Take All the Bicycles the Firm Produces.

The Yost Manufacturing company has concluded a contract with an eastern firm whereby the latter agrees to take all the bicycles the company can produce.

The works now have a capacity of about 15,000 wheels a year, though the product at present runs between 7,000 and 10,000.

The company will therefore not need men on the road, and will be saved the expense of advertising.

Last week the manager of the eastern concern was here and the contract was agreed to yesterday.

BOY PRISONERS.

Charles Morgan Before the U. S. Commissioner.

The Trouble Two Lads Have Got Into Trough Having and Trying to Pass Bogus Bills.

Charles G. Morgan, the boy arrested the other day, after having jumped his bail in connection with the case against him and another youth named Taylor for having in possession and attempting to pass counterfeit notes, had a hearing this afternoon before U. S. Commissioner Beckham. Morgan was the one on whom was first found the bogus stuff after he and Taylor had been arrested by Detective McLaughlin. They were afterward charged by the United States officers. Morgan procured bail and ran away; but came back and was gathered in. He says himself he was scared, but the blamed thing bothered him so much he thought he'd get back and get through with it. Both he and Taylor were brought from the jail, where Taylor has been for several months. His shoes and stockings were so bad that Deputy Marshal Dan Harrmon, who had been in charge as a witness in Morgan's case, sent out an order for new shoes and stockings, which will be paid for by the United States government, which attends to the comfort of its prisoners in this respect. Morgan, like Taylor, was held for trial at the December term of the district court.

THE SNAKE CATCHER.

How Boa Constrictors Are Secured for Menageries.

"To catch a boa is a very difficult and dangerous task," says a man who makes it his business to capture wild animals and reptiles for menagerie purposes. "Briefly, it is accomplished by means of a labyrinthian tangle, embracing 60 square feet of ground. "The labyrinth is made by joining toge her end to end, pieces of matting. The web is eight feet high, usually, and placed so that the opposite walls will be two feet apart. All sorts of criss-cross and diverging combinations are made with the matting—it is supported here and there by stakes, making, when it is set, a geometrical puzzle that might well challenge the ingenuity of man.

"The trap is baited with a live pig, which is placed in a pen in the center of the labyrinth. By and by along comes the boa constrictor. It is easy enough to get in. He scents the prey; he is very hungry; the pig is devoured, and here the boa comes to grief. For hours he tries to release himself from the tortuous passages which rise about him, but finally he grows tired and stretches himself out for a nap. Then is our time. We open the labyrinth and catch him."

The Grace of Resignation.

Following is the text of a significant note handed to the mayor yesterday by the writer thereof:

Toledo, O., Nov. 17, 1892.

To the Honorable the Mayor and Members of the Common Council of Toledo:

Gents: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the board of councilmen from the First ward, and would request an early action on the same on your part. Not forgetting, but appreciating many kindnesses of several members of your honorable body, I am yours, etc.,

CHAS. NEUENDORF.

QUITE A GALE.

The Weather Is Getting Steadily Colder.

From yesterday noon until the same time to-day the average velocity of the wind was 28 miles an hour. This is counted a gale. During the day the wind changed to northwest, from southwest, and diminished. There were storm signals up all round the lakes. The wires were blown down so that telegraphic reports of the weather at many stations could not be obtained, and no weather map was got out here this morning. Instead a brief statement was prepared and distributed.

With the exception of November 27, 1874, when there was a wind of 48 miles an hour, the gale of last night was the strongest recorded in November in 22 years.

From 2 o'clock yesterday to the same hour to-day the temperature here fell 33 degrees—to 32 degrees, and the mercury was still falling. To-morrow will be colder and clear.

EXTRA ELECTIONS.

Filling Vacancies in Council Will Cost Something.

"How about the proclamation for an election in the First ward?" was asked of Mayor Emmick this morning.

"I have not issued it yet," was the reply. "I was going to see what they are going to do with this fellow in court to-day. It costs too much to hold separate elections."

When questioned as to the difference, His Honor admitted that the cost would be about the same, as the elections have to be held in the different wards, anyway; but that one proclamation will do for two or more wards if the elections can be held on the same day.

City Clerk Lamb also stated that there would be very little difference now, but that if the elections could have been held at the time of the general election, as was that for councilman in the Second ward, there would have been a great saving. Now there will be the cost of judges, clerks and other expenses in each precinct.

NEW DEPARTURE

In Musical Circles Introduced at Miss Bernn's Concert.

Toledo Musicians Enthusiastic Over the Wonderful Work of This Talented Young Artist.

A large and appreciative audience assembled in Memorial hall last evening—despite the unpleasant weather—to listen to one of the finest concerts ever given in Toledo.

Miss Anna Bernn, assisted by the Philharmonic club, of Detroit, and the Toledo Maennerchor were the participants.

The Toledo Maennerchor rendered two numbers in a manner which reflects great credit upon the organization.

A Trio in c minor, Allegro con frio—Andante cantable con Variazioni—Menuetto—Finale—By Miss Anna Bernn, Mr. William Yunk, and Mr. Alfred Hoffmann, was a rare treat, the execution and conception being admirable.

Mr. William Yunk's rendition of Fantasie, from Faust, was the gem of the evening, and it was necessary for him to respond to an encore.

Mr. Alfred Hoffman delighted his hearers with Fantaise and Variations, by F. Servais, responding to an encore which was very fine.

The program was concluded with a quintette, in G minor, allegro brilliante—In Modo d'und Marcia—Molto Vivace, allegro maenon troppo, by Miss Bernn and the Philharmonic club.

The club is worthy of the highest praise.

Miss Bernn's work last evening surprised even her friends.

Through the entre performance she played with a brilliancy of execution and exquisite touch, without a single flat or false note to mar the perfect harmony.

She is an artist of the highest ability and a valuable acquisition to musical and social circles.

She received numerous handsome floral offerings.

OLD-TIME BEAUTIES.

What Our Grandmothers Did to Make Themselves Lovely.

The belles of the seventeenth century slept with their hands in chicken-skin gloves to give the skin delicacy and whiteness. To keep the complexion peachy and pink the old-time beauties believed there was nothing equal to the juice of strawberries, either fresh or preserved.

Mme. Recamier is said to have bathed her face, neck and arms in fresh buttermilk once a day.

April snow-water, bottled and well corked, was and is used by many a soft-skinned woman for the preservation of her loveliness.

To make the waist slender it was the custom of early English ladies to sleep in stays tightly clasped and corded.

But this is not to be recommended for beauties nowadays.

When a society belle of our grandmother's day happened to be afflicted with a foot too long for beauty, she shortened its apparent length by wearing very high heels. Sometimes the heels were so high that dear grandmamma could hardly walk upon them.

To remove skin blemishes that were too pronounced to serve as beauty marks the unfortunate old-time beauties used to bind salt pork upon the offensive spots, and sometimes even eelskin and chopped frogs' legs were employed.

Slitting the skin at the outer edge of the eye to give greater size to that orb was not an uncommon thing in the good old days.

If a girl happened to be afflicted with stooping shoulders her devoted mamma would bind a flat piece of board upon her back to keep the erring shoulders straight.

But there were some very dainty things which were employed by grandmamma and her friends to keep themselves lovely. For example, grandmamma dipped her laces in lavender water to make them smell sweet. She sprinkled her locks with oil of rosemary. Her finger tips were touched with rose paste, and so were her lips, while her skin was fragrant with attar of roses, which old black mammy poured into her bath.—N. Y. World.

Fight With a Snake in Which a Man With the Woodman's Weapon Played a Prominent Part.

We got mixed up in a man, a snake, and a stone fence last night, and we hardly know just where he landed. A Gay street merchant got off his little snake yarn, which happened when he was younger and lived in a little state. He or some other fellow was going along near a stone fence when the tail of a snake was observed. The tail was grasped, but there was another end to that snake, and the other end was evidently the business end. It rose right up and came over from the other side of said stone wall and proceeded to interview whatever it was that it found trifling with its tail, says the Westchester Record. The snake proved an immense black one, and it at once wound itself around the body of its assailant and trouble ensued then and there. The fight was a prolonged one, and had not a man with an axe appeared on the scene the snake would have squeezed the life out of its victim. So fine a specimen was it that it is to be sent to this day in one of the museums over in Providence, R. I.

Lime Kilns, Nov. 18.—Down—Pere Marquette, 11:30 last night; Lumberman barges, 9:20 a. m.

Up—Oades consort, 10:40 last night; Rosedale, Bessie, 7 a. m.; Abino, 7:30; Florida, 8. Wind southwest; gale.

Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—Grain freights were slow at 2 1-4 cents for corn to Buffalo. Agents who had boats to load next week were in no hurry to place them as they thought possible better figures might be had. Although the Erie canal will remain open to December 5, no contracts for grain are being taken by the boat men. They prefer to take the grain as it arrives in Buffalo.

Steamer Released.

Buffalo, Nov. 18.—Steamer Majestic, which was blown on a shoal in Erie basin yesterday, was released this morning. She drifted across the harbor entrance, blocking navigation. Nine of the most powerful tugs in the harbor were required to straighten her up. A heavy southerly gale is blowing.

A Gale.

Amherstburg, Nov. 18.—Southwest gale. Sheltered here from Marquette, two lumberman barges.

Duluth.

Duluth, Nov. 18.—Arrived—Japan, Moran, Australasia, Tasmania, Berlin, Spencer, Pennington, Northern Wave, Fitzpatrick, Hope, China,. Cleared—Alcona, Alta, Republic, Neshoto, London, Ashland, Colgate, Hundred Eighteen, Pope, wheat, A. A. Parker, North Star, flour, Buffalo.

Cheboygan.

Cheboygan, Nov. 18.—The steam barge Maggie Duncan stranded on Point Aux Pins last night. She is a foot and a half out of water forward. The wrecker Manistee has gone to her relief.

Port Huron.

Port Huron, Nov. 18.—Down—Avon, Hodge, 6:10 a. m.; Codorus, 7:30; Denver, 10:50.

Up—Mather and consort, N. Hesper, New York, Elphicke, 1:30 a. m.; Morey, Josephine and consort, 2:30; Rhoda, Emily, Helena and consort, 8:30; Everett, Minch, Montana, Gladiator, 10:30.

The Straits.

Mackinaw, Nov. 18.—Down—John Owen, 10 last night; Gov. Smith, 4:10 a. m.; Craig consort, 8:20.

Up—John Duncan, 3:30 a. m.; Cambria, 11. At anchor Wade, Robert Packer, Wallace consort, Superior, Sandusky, Pringle consorts. Wind southwest, strong, snow squalls.

Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 18.—John Langdon, jr., keeper of the light house at Portage Lake, Lake Superior, has sent the following letter to Commander Ludlow: "I found on the beach this morning a three-inch oak plank with the name 'Ben Harrison.' It looks as though it was the name of some schooner's stern." Ben Harrison is the name of a lumber barge towed by the steamer Pringle. The Pringle and consorts were reported in shelter last night at Mackinaw and the letter may have a political significance.

NDIVIDUAL TASTE HAS PLAY.

Every Woman Must Now Originate Her Own Success in Gowning.

There is a tide in the affairs of millinery when every woman must originate her own successes, when distinction in dress means discretion in selection, and blind following of fashion plates results in disaster. Verily, the tide is at its flood in this day of renaissance, for the mode has gone mad. Fashion is in a wild frolic and holds perpetual high carnival in a chaos of color, a confusion of fantacies, bizarre and splendid, when only the artist's touch saves legitimate picturesqueness from absurd eccentricity and distinguishes between the richness which means elegance and the costliness which results in vulgarity. Happy is the woman who can seek her inspirations in a gallery of her own or some one else's ancestresses, for the materials of the day faithfully reproduce the old models even to the laces and garniture. Such a gown designed by a famous belle in the ancient time, and copied by the wife of an artist up town, is made of Russian velour, dull bronze brown on a pale blue ground. The skirt, soft and graceful in its fall, has no decoration except a cord of plain bronze velvet on the edge and another at the top, where it is slightly fulled instead of being gored or fitted with darts. The lining is blue and pink changeable taffeta. A little close short waist of plain bronze velvet is embroidered in a pattern with blue and gold, and laced down the front with gold cord. A full bronze frill, lined with blue, is gathered about the edge, widening on the shoulders and falling over huge slashed sleeve puffs of bronze, with blue glimpses in the slashes. The gathered guimpe and long close sleeves, embroidered from the hand to the puff by means of a gathering up the inside of the arm, are of soft liberty gauze, pale blue, and unlined. There is a delicate air of old-time gentility in the pretty toilet, somehow wanting in the illustrated modes of he day, and most gracious and refining in its charm.—New York Sun.

BRANDY SAVED HIS LIFE.

An Incident in the Alps Showing the Timely Use of a Stimulant.

In the old drenching times of Tod, when patients used to get their bottles of brandy in the 24 hours, a comparison of the kind would have been of extreme value; but the routine treatment of inflammation by alcohol is now a thing of the past and, as a rule, we merely look out for special symptoms and complications, and meet them as they arise, says a writer in Blackwood's Magazine. But as a contribution to the discussion, let me quote Brudenell Carter, who quotes Dr. Braun of Moscow, who said that he had 45 per cent. of bad cases after the eye operations among the peasants until he gave them wine or brandy, when the percentage fell to 6 per cent.

In the sudden collapse of fainting or snake bite, or when any one is called on to make a violent physical effort almost beyond his powers, alcohol shows its power. Swiss guides well know the help that a mouthful or two of white wine gives them and I remember an incident in the Alps where a timely stimulant probably saved three lives. We were rashly struggling up an ice slope without guides, and the first man on the rope, an experienced mountaineer, vigorously cut steps while we shivered in our places, dodging the falling chips and trying to feel brave and happy. Suddenly the sound of the axe stopped and a voice fell clear and sharp from aloft: "Brandy at once or I can't go on."

Luckily we had it and a sip or two set him right, but, as he told us afterward, so overpowering was the feeling of exhaustion that he could hardly have raised his arm, or even remained much longer in his place without the stimulant, which fortunately was at hand. As we were at the moment half way up a perpendicular wall nearly 200 feet high, with little but a narrow ledge to protect us from a frightful precipice below, I invite your readers to picture for themselves what the consequences of an accident would have been.

Encourage the parade of the boys tomorrow night.

The Bee's cry is still for local organization of the democracy.

Now that the democratic party is together, let us all keep it in that shape.

The Washington Post wittily remarks that Mr. Cleveland has learned before this, that advice is on the free list.

The election of Mrs. Lease to the United States senate would be a bare-faced repudiation of Peffer and his whiskers.

The egg-beater is a very ingenious contrivance, but what Jerry Simpson stands most in need of is a well-regulated, able-bodied egg-thrower.

A man has been discovered in Perry county who has the temerity to write that "McKinley is the coming man." And the fellow is yet at large.

If any thing can retard or kill the movement for a local board of control, it will be the advocacy of such a reform by the organ on the corner.

Ta ta, Consul Brown; you'll be with us in the spring again. Living at Glasgow is too expensive for a straight-laced republican, and a good democrat will try it awhile.

The labor organizations of the county have set aside December 13 as "Homestead Day," and financial assistance will on that date be secured for Carnegie's strikers. Toledo should be in line.

Seneca county democrats will celebrate "the glorious" next Tuesday evening at Tiffin. Uncle Sam, Grover himself, and a number of other distinguished gentlemen will be in line in the parade.

The Lincoln league, one of the leading and swell republican clubs in central Ohio, with headquarters at Columbus, has given up the ghost. Gone with the rest of the slide and because of lack of patronage for its members.

"Manufacturer," in another column, makes some good points on the smoke question. A question of the most importance, however, is that touched upon by Mr. Griffith at Tuesday night's meeting relative to the poisonous gases arising from unconsumed smoke. A little more light on the point would be interesting.

W. I. Squire and the Ohio Republican League re-endorses the McKinley bill and trots out the futher of the monstrosity as his own successor in 1893. Strange, isn't it?

"Life is certainty,
Death is a doubt,
Many a man's dead
Who is walking about."

Mr. McKinley is dead, but he fails to recognize the fact. The League cannot resurrect him either.

An exchange says "if Governor McKinley runs for re-election next year as a vindication of himself and his bill, James E. Campbell should run against him." But McKinley will not again attempt to secure the vindication of a measure that has had so terrible a turning-down as has his tariff law. It would have been better for the republicans had he been defeated last fall. Certain it is, had he been so, his party would have never attempted to elect a president on a high tariff platform.

Kora F. Briggs, the tall, handsome and hustling newspaper man of Tiffin, is a full-fledged candidate for the postoffice. If any democrat is entitled to recognition, certainly Kora Briggs is. He has done as much hard work for the party as the best of them. Faithful in season and out of season, he deserves well, and Congressman Dodge Hare will not go amiss in endorsing his candidacy. The appointment would undoubtedly prove a popular one in Tiffin.

Congressman Harter is engaged just now in the performance of a very wise act. Without waiting for a general scramble, he is thus relieving many democrats from a great amount of useless labor and consequent disappointment. Mr. Harter is examining the claims of candidates for office, and announces his choice as soon as he reaches a conclusion. When the proper time arrives he will file his recommendations with the departments, and the parchments will likely follow in good time. Mr. Harter may not be a very good politician, as some of the republican newspapers claim, but he ought to have credit for the good sense he is now displaying.

THE FOREIGN VOTER.

In seeking for cause for the late republican rout, the organ on the corner, which first laid it to treachery within the ranks, and thus struck at the most intelligent men of its party, now, in truly know-nothing language, blames the foreign element for voting with the democratic party, through ignorance. If the "foreign element" is to be credited with the result of the recent bloodless revolution, it is but another proof that "history repeats itself;" for to the "foreign element" was chiefly due the independence of this country, and that same "foreign element" played no unimportant part in the preservation of the Union during the war of secession. The know-nothing writer who penned the charge of ignorance has only to consider for an instant, if he has sufficient material to think, to discover that he has reflected upon his own father or grandfather. His facts are as far awry as his fancies; for according to as good an authority as Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, up to the present year, at least, the foreign vote has been equally divided between the democratic and republican parties; and it will likely be found on proper investigation that the number of native votes that went to the democratic party was at least equal to those of naturalized citizens. All voted for the country's best interests.

THE BALLOT.

Prof. J. J. McCook, in a late number of the Forum, in discussing the subject of venal voting, after considering the ease with which votes are purchased under the open ballot and the use of liquor in elections, takes up the ways of evading the secret ballot in Connecticut. He speaks of the famous printer's specks, the application of a paster to a certain name in a certain way, or the writing in of a particular name agreed upon as means of marking for identification, then claims that a manager may sacrifice his own vote in the morning, carry away the stamped official envelope, inclose a vote in it, seal it, place it in the hands of a "worker" and condition payment upon the delivery of a new and unbroken envelope, and that this may be kept up all day. There are a good many other "ways" in the schemes he mentions; but it is evident from his possibilities that the system of voting in Connecticut does not approach perfection as nearly as it might. A better way is in use in Ohio. Under the system of voting in this state it would be utterly impossible for a manager to carry a ballot out of the booth. Voters do not use envelopes, and if they did, there is no reason why any man should be allowed to carry one away. Then the name of the man who receives a ballot is written upon the top when he receives it, and this part is torn off just before the ballot is deposited; so that such a scheme would be readily detected, even should a ballot be stolen out of the booth. The only likely method mentioned by Prof. McCook is that of paying men to stay away, and it only remains for the easy detection and prosecution and disfranchisement of one or two of the bribers under the Ohio law to put an effective stop to that.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION.

The Toledo society for the extension of university teaching begins the course of lectures this evening at 8 o'clock.

The course will consist of six lectures on English literature of the Victorian period, and will be delivered by Prof. Bensly, of University of Chicago.

The lectures will be as follows: First two on Tennyson, the next four on Browning, Matthew Arnold, Rasetti and Swinburne.

Toledo people have not forgotten the benefit derived from last winter's lectures, neither is it believed, have the interest and enthusiasm abated.

The University extension work last winter educated others beside habitual readers and thinkers.

And while not so very long ago, a lecturer in this city was pretty sure of an empty room, he is now just as certain of a large and interested audience.

Those who attended last winter's course will be delighted with the opportunity of attending another, and this number will be augmented by many more.

University extension work has done a great deal for Toledo, and there is still more work for it to do.

The Bee predicts that this winter's work will be even more pleasant and profitable than the last, and that is saying much.

HOW THEY LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

The harmony of the grand old party is something beautiful to contemplate, and the consistency, too, is a bright and shining jewel.

Whereas, before election the organs declared in thunder tones that the republican party was sheltered by the white-winged dove of peace, no sooner had the smoke of battle cleared sufficiently to let them realize their annihilation, than they, with one accord, assigned the cause of their downfall to existing factions.

This lets them down easier than a truthful acknowledgment of the real cause—the corruption and rottenness of their party manipulation.

Still, there is small doubt that the bitter enmity existing between prominent party leaders, assisted materially in the avalanche which struck the "over-confident" on November 8.

A republican paper says that, "if Senator Sherman retires from the senate, it will only be after he is entirely satisfied that Foraker cannot succeed him."

And yet, the pugnacious Joseph is being quoted as a life-long admirer of the venerable John, who, in turn loves his would-be successor like a son, and would offer him up as a sacrifice to the headsman's ax, as willingly, if not as reverently, as Abraham offered Isaac.

Bad Way to Get a Living.

Speaking of the large number of offices which President Cleveland will have to dispose of, here is a letter which he once addressed to a young man who was an aspirant for an official favor from the president's hands:

There are no persons so forlorn and so much to be pitied as those who have learned in early life to look to public positions for a livelihood. It unfits a man or boy for any other business, and is apt to make a kind of respectable vagrant of him. If you do well in other occupations, and thus become valuable to the people, they will find you out when they want a good man for public service. You may be sure that I am, as you say, the friend of every boy willing to help himself; but my experience teaches me that I cannot do you a better service than to advise you not to join the great army of office-seekers.

That is just as good advice now as it ever was, and it is as true as gospel.—Boston Herald.

Club Organized—List of Officers and Members.

Arrangements to Erect a Magnificent Club House—Toledo Secures Control.

The Toledo Trout club has purchased the famous fishing resort known as the Rockwell Mill stream, near Port Clinton.

The stream was formerly owned by the Bellevue Trout club, but a number of Toledoans have gone in and secured a controlling interest.

A temporary organization has been effected, and some day next week permanent officers will be elected.

The present officers and directors are: President, Henry Hewitt; vice president, Clarence A. Draper, of Draper & Nugent; secretary and treasurer, Frank W. Annui, of Morehouse & Co. The other directors are Fred Geddes, of Brown & Geddes, and Henry R. Felker.

Among the members are E. L. Southworth, Will Brigham, J. J. Coon, David Wallace, Jim Hodge, William Walcott, Jos. Teple, Adam Burger, James Cummings, E. E. Dow, of Pliny Watson & Co.; Frank Gifford, of the Paragon; Wm. Hardy, of Shaw & Kendall, and F. B. Losee.

There are a number of members in Cleveland, Columbus and other cities.

Arrangements are being completed for the erection of a magnificent club house.

Membership now costs $125 and in a few months it will be much higher.

Success to the Toledo Trout club!

A NEW BLOCK

To Be Erected on Adams Street

By Philip Schmidt—A Brief Description of the New Structure.

Another elegant brick block is to be erected on Adams street.

The growth of the business interests and improvement of this street within the last two years has simply been phenomenal. It is now recognized as one of the principal business thoroughfares in the city.

The block referred to will be erected by Philip Schmidt, of the Schmidt bottling works, on the northwest corner of Adams and Michigan streets.

Mr. Schmidt owns two lots on this corner, and on this site the building will be located. One of the houses is occupied at present by Dr. Mary Priest, while the other, which is vacant, is being removed, as will the other one.

According to the present plans the structure will front 50 feet on Adams street and 100 on Michigan. It will be three stories high and will be constructed of brick and stone. The plan is for a business block, but the entire building will be used as a flat until such time as it will be advisable to use it for business purposes. This refers only to the first floor. The remainder will be adapted for flats, modern and improved.

TOLEDO ASYLUM.

Making Appropriations for Necessary Improvements.

Additions To Be Made to Cottages and a Large Building Erected for The Worst Patients—Meeting Yesterday.

Three trustees of the Toledo asylum for the insane attended the annual meeting held at the institution last night. They were Dr. Baxter, of Liman; Dr. Campbell, of Fulton county, and Senator Geiser. They agreed on a contract for the suply of natural gas for another year at $20,000, and other appropriations, chief among them being for the building of additions to several of the cottages and for the erection of a large building for the worst patients, so that they may be quiet and removed from disturbance which has an injurious effect and retards a possible improvement in their conditions, physical and mental.

The appropriations are considerably larger than those of last year, that for gas being $4,000 greater than for the past year. This is a necessary estimate, however, as gas is the most desirable fuel, and a sufficient quantity of it is wanted in such an institution. The appropriations for enlargement of the cottages, and for the new building are positively compulsory, as there is not now room for the proper accommodation of the number of patients in charge.

No changes were made in the official force.

Toledo is agitating a scheme to remodel her city government. In the light of late developments there is certainly room for improvement so far as the proceedings of the city council are concerned.—Bowling Green Tribune.

One by One the Roses Fall.

One by one the Toledo council boodlers drop before the certain execution of the outraged law. The successful prosecution of these criminals will be fraught with good influence far and near in repressing similar criminality.—Findlay Republican.

This Includes Toledo.

The federal appointes who went down to Columbus last winter at the bidding of John Sherman, to do dirty work for the administration in meddling with the Ohio senatorial fight, did a good deal of chuckling over the result. They don't chuckle any more.—Putnam County Vidette, Rep.

Don't Like the Trip.

They say that Ashley hates his contemplated trip up Salt River so intensely that he has eschued the use of salt in his victuals. It is said on good authority that what with bets and his election "expenses" the campaign will cost him and his sons over $100,000. Jim certainly was slapped squarely in his classical, patrician face.—Napoleon Northwest.

A NEW HOTEL.

St. Louis, Nov. 18.—A Chicago firm has completed the purchase of a valuable corner facing the postoffice, and has arranged to at once erect a lofty fire-proof hotel, which is to be ready in time to accommodate visitors to the fair.

OHIO PRESS COMMENT.

If Enybody Kin He Kin.

Why not stop this ceasing labor of trying to find out from public men, the cause of the land slide. Let Labor Commissioner Peck account for it.—Lima Times.

Home in the Spring, Tra-La.

A great many Ohio republicans are arranging to return from Washington early in March. Spring weather is very unhealthy in that town.—Ohio State Journal.

This Cannon Will Be Spiked.

Well, Joseph G. Cannon has been reloaded again. His mouth will be on duty in the next congress and will do good service on the minority side.—Cleveland World.

Have None to Lose.

The great advantage possessed by the Foraker ring of the republican party is that they will not have to regret losing the offices—they have none to lose.—Zanesville Signal.

All Agreed.

The democratic platform denounced the McKinley bill as a fraud. The republican leaders seem to agree with their declaration now that the election is over.—Steubenville Gazette.

Why Jack Did Not Eat His Supper.

"Cheap" John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia "breeches maker," was right in saying that he would not be in the next cabinet. Cleveland will have no use for such boodlers.—Mt. Vernon Banner.

History Does Repeat Itself.

Twenty years ago Horace Greeley, then editor of the New York Tribune, met one of the most disastrous political defeats in the history of elections. He only received eighty of the 366 electoral votes cast. And now, twenty years later, another editor of the Tribune is emphatically defeated.—Dayton Herald.

Might Do Worse.

Now, if Mr. Cleveland would only be magnanimous, and do the right thing by Ohio, he could build a cabinet something like this:

For secretary of state, James E. Campbell, of Ohio.

For secretary of treasury, Michael D. Harter, of Ohio.

For secretary of war, James E. Neal, of Ohio.

For secretary of navy, Tom L. Johnson, of Ohio.

For attorney general, Frank Hurd, of Ohio.

For postmaster general, Lawrence T. Neal, of Ohio.

For secretary of interior, Joseph H. Outhwaite, of Ohio.

For secretary of agriculture, Allen W. Thurman, of Ohio.

We submit without fear of successful contradiction by any loyal son of Ohio that Mr. Cleveland may go further and fare worse than if he picked the advisers here proposed..—Cleveland Leader.

BRING YOUR BUGLES, BOYS

For the Grand Parade and Rally To-morrow Night.

Everyone Is Invited to Participate—Line of March—Bring Your Lanterns.

At a meeting of the democratic executive committee yesterday afternoon it was agreed to let the boys have a parade, and to give the use of the band to the processionists.

The rendezvous will be the corner of Madison and Superior streets, and the procession will start at 7:30.

The line of march will be from rendezvous on Superior to St. Clair, St. Clair to Monroe street, on Monroe to Summit, Summit to Adams, on Adams to Memorial Hall.

No special arrangements have been made but every democrat is asked to participate. Bugles, lanterns, fireworks, etc., will be in order.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

Col. Smead Responds.

To the Editor: Could one always have so kind a critic as "A. N." in last evening's Bee, all the bitterness of discuss on would be taken away. If all possessed the kind heart that the pen the writer wields suggests he has, the question of punishing school children would not have arisen. I wish "A. N." had written the name in full, as I should like to know the person. I can only say that my communication (written by request) was very hastily composed. I did not even have time to read and revise it before mailing and in some respects it is faulty; especially when it conveys the idea that the prisoner was chained to the wall 24 hours every day. He was only so confined during the hours that other prisoners were at work.

I can only decide questions as I understand their practical results. If all nations were alike, we could have free trade. If all natures were what we wish they were, punishment of all kinds would be unnecessary. But all natures are not alike and some kind of punishment is necessary. I, of course, should be within the range of the exercise of good judgment, and I don't believe there are more accidents in that line than in others. I still stand by the substance of my letter, that it is not always well to be guided by sentiment; and I still stand by what I said concerning my own boys. I do not want that they should go to heaven on "flowery beds of ease," nor to be too kindly treated at school or elsewhere because of friendly sentiments toward their parents, but rather because of their own individual merit. I don't believe they can be strong either mentally or physically unless they have some hard battles in life. ISAAC D. SMEAD.

An Explanation.

To the Editor: More than a year ago the Parkersburg Insurance company requested the Sandusky Insurance company to re-insure their business, and an effort was made to consummate a deal of that kind. The Parkersburg company agreed among other things to pay a certain amount of money for their re-insurance. This they have never done. They also agreed to furnish the Sandusky with a transcript of their entire business in order that the last-named company might cancel such business as was deemed undesirable. This they failed and refused to do.

Previous to this time the Sandusky had re-insured considerable business with the Parkersburg. Upon the failure of the negotiations mentioned above, the former company cancelled these policies, and there is now due the Sandusky return premiums on the cancelled policies and over $1,000 on losses which the Parkersburg had re-insured. The Sandusky company does not, in our judgment, owe the Parkersburg a dollar, on the contrary, claim quite a sum of money is due to it.

We trust you will give the foregoing explanation a place in your paper for the information of the insuring public. You will also please correct statement as to amount claimed by the Parkersburg, as it is $6,300 instead of amount set forth by you in your last night's issue.

Very respectfully,
F. K. HOGUE, Secretary.

INJURED BY A STORM.

Chester, Ill., Nov. 18.—During the heavy storm which visited this section yesterday morning the residence of Herman Oetting in Palestine precinct was blown down and Mrs. Oetting and two small children killed by falling timbers. Mr. Oetting is reported as being seriously injured. Mrs. Oetting was a daughter of Mr. Charles Heilkamp, superintendent of the county farm.

AN EXCITING TIME

On a Monroe Street Car Last Evening.

A Drunken Man Tries to Knife Will Geroe,

Mistaking Him for the Conductor—The Assailant Is Thrown Off and Injured.

There was an exciting time on a Monroe street car last evening before 6 o'clock.

A well-known man, whose name is suppressed on account of his family and by request, got on the car at the corner of St. Clair and Monroe streets. He seemed to be somewhat the worse for drink, and a lady complained to the conductor who, entering the car, shook the man roughly and warned him not to lean on his neighbors, but to sit up straight.

The old man was seemingly stunned for a moment, and the public insult seemed to completely paralyze him for a moment.

Straightening himself up he reached into his pocket, and pulling out a sharp-pointed knife, said:

"I'll fix him."

And so saying he arose from his seat and staggered toward the door.

It happened that just at that moment the conductor entered, but the man, failing to recognize him, went out on the platform.

William B. Geroe, of the commission firm of Geroe & Son, Monroe street, happened to be on the rear platform.

Without a word the man made a plunge of the knife at Geroe, who parried the stroke and grappled with the now infuriated man.

In the struggle the would-be murderer fell from the platform to the street.

The excitement in the crowded car was intense. The car was stopped, and several men ran back to where the prostrate form of the injured man lay.

He was picked up unconscious. Several parties on the car knew him and gave directions as to where he should be taken.

The car went on and under the kindly ministrations of those who remained the man was able to take the next car home.

Inquiry this morning reveals the fact that outside of being stunned by the fall from the car, he was uninjured.

Mr. Geroe entertains no ill feeling towards the man, who evidently mistook Mr. Geroe for the conductor.

More in the car say the lady was too sensitive and the conductor too harsh, though all say there was no occasion for pulling a knife.

It was a fortunate escape for Mr. Geroe. If the assailant's hand had been steadier there would probably have been murder committed.

PIONEER SKETCHES:

Matches Made in Heaven.

By Dr. H. Scott, Lancaster, O.

It was once well nigh universally believed throughout the Christian civilized world, that man or woman were mated in heaven—that matches were determined by God in the council of his own good will. Under the inspiration of this faith the poet exclaimed:

"One mould for every two designed,
And blessed the new made pair."

And still further in pursuance of the thought:

"Some guardian angel tell me where;
What distant lands this unknown pair;
Or distant seas detain.
Swift as the wheel of fortune rolls,
I'd fly to meet and mingle souls,
And wear the joyful chain."

Not always so joyful as many thousands of examples on every hand show.

I do not know whether this belief was entertained in Pagan countries to any general extent; perhaps so. I suppose their gods arranged their affairs for them, too. In Christendom nations the belief 70 years ago was, and still is, so far as it exists, the ramification of Calvinism—of the doctrine of the decrees—of foreordination—of fore-knowledge—of determining all things whatsoever that should come to pass before the foundations of the worlds were laid. This doctrine was strictly Presbyterian and Baptist—of predestinarian Baptists—of those who adopted the views of John Calvin in his day. But yet whatever may be said, or thought now, this doctrine of the decrees was widespread. It permeated every shade of Armenian faith, unconfessed. It was hard to get rid of the idea that "whatever is to be will be;" and the foreknowledge of God. Many who openly repudiated Calvinism confessed it in their lives. Thus, when death came, it was the appointed time, and man must bow in humble submission. It was very common to say: "His or her time has come;" and "God's ways are past finding out;" and "Deep in unfathomable mind of never-failing skill:

He treasures up His bright design,
And works His sovereign will."

These doctrines have a much feebler hold on the world now, and consequently less is said of matches in heaven. We are compelled, therefore, to say, that if matches were made in heaven indeed, heaven was a very bad match-maker—in fact a failure.

Nevertheless, throughout the entire new country, so called, threescore and ten years ago, and presumably all over the continent, the common mind was that the man and the woman designed for each other would in God's good time come together; and so mothers comforted their marrageable daughters by telling them that the right one would come along afterwhile; and the girls themselves having a competent faith, governed themselves accordingly. If a young man made the mistake of proposing to a young lady and was refused, he simply had not found the right one—his mate—that was all; and the repulse was not to disparage him.

Under this belief that matches were determined in heaven, the young people naturally became curious to pry into things—to see if they could not pry into the secrets of heaven a little—to see if they could not get a glimpse, in some way, of the mate that was to be. This of course could not be wrong—impious. God might favor them in their plans, even though his will was not to be found out. He might at least excuse their curiosity in a matter of such vital interest.

Accordingly they devised numerous devices for testing matters of love and marriage. We can no more than notice two or three of the devices that were religously relied on. There was a plant found in every garden, called live forever. It grew up in clusters of slim stems, with small leaves of a pale green color. Two sprigs of equal length were cut from the cluster and stuck side by side inside of the cabin, by inserting the cut end into a crack. They were named; one for the young man; the other for the girl. If they turned up and grew harmoniously together, which they frequently did, then it was to be a match. If the contrary, one turned away; or if either failed to grow, which also was sometimes the case, then the guessing was in error—that was all. One would seldom enter a cabin where these live forever sprigs were not to be seen, especially if there were young people in the family.

Another of their methods was that of digging a small hole in the ground, a few inches deep, exactly in the center of two roads that crossed at right angles. Then the girl went alone, and getting her right ear down close on the mouth of the hole, if her true love were walking on either of the four ends of road, no matter how many miles away, she could distinctly hear his footsteps, and at the same time get a glimpse of his person. Others on the road she could not hear. If no footsteps were heard, the disappointment was not great, the right one was not abroad—that was all. This was a device of the boys more than the girls.

BOOKS AND WRITERS.

The Columbian Era Is Bringing Out

A Large Number of Fine Historical Works.

Delightful Stories for Children Published by the Frederick A. Stokes Company.

The Columbian era is making the minutest historical event of interest to the reading public, and the avidity with which history is seized upon by readers of all classes, is doubtless the reason of the perfect avalanche of historical literature with which the country is being flooded.

Among the best of these works is "In the Boyhood of Lincoln," by Hezekiah Butterworth, published by D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Abraham Lincoln has become the typical character of American institutions, and the book shows how the character which so commanded the hearts and confidence of men was formed.

The book is one to interest old and young.

Can be procured in Toledo of Brown, Eager & Hull.

The Battle of New York, written by William O. Stoddard, and published by D. Appleton & Co., is another work that that can be read with profit and pleasure by everybody, while being especially designed for young people.

Printed on thick, creamy paper in clear, large type and profusely and beautifully illustrated, it would make a handsome addition to any library, or a lovely holiday gift.

For sale in Toledo by Brown, Eager & Hull.

The D. Appleton company have just issued a handsome book, "Englishman's Haven," by W. J. Gordon, a story of Louisburg. Its history is remarkable, and it is written in a style to attract and hold the attention of the reader from the first chapter to the finis.

Like all books published by this excellent house the paper is thick and cream tinted, and the print large and clear. Brown, Eager & Hull.

A scientific work that is of especial interest to Toledo people who attended the university extension course last winter, is Prof. G. Frederick Wright's book on "Man and the Glacial Period."

Volume lxix has just been issued by D. Appleton & Co.

There are maps and illustrations, and the work is perhaps one of the most valuable contributions to science made by the distinguished author.

Along the Florida Reefs, by Charles Frederick Holder, LL. D., and published by D. Appleton & Co., New York, is an interesting addition to the Bee's book table. The adventures and incidents do not belong to the realm of fiction. They are the actual happenings in the daily life of several boys, one of them the author, who resided for years near the coral reefs. It is as instructive as it is entertaining. In Toledo: Brown, Eager & Hull.

Some Good Novels.

"An Attic Philosopher in Paris," or a peep at the world from a garret, being the journal of a happy man, is from the French of Emil Souvestre. D. Appleton & Co., New York, are the publishers. It is a story of everyday life and tells in a most beautiful way what people can learn from observation, the price of power, and the worth of fame, and talks on many of the characteristics of present day people. Brown, Eager & Hull. Toledo.

"In Old St. Stephen's," D. Appleton & Co., New York, is by Jeannie Drake. It is a novel and the pages tell a pretty story and bring back to life may scenes which stirred the people of the south during its years of progress and decay. For sale in Toledo by Brown, Eager & Hull; price 50c.

"Mrs. Bligh," a novel by Rhoda Broughton, is published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. It is by the author of "Good-Bye, Sweetheart," "Nancy," and other popular novels, and the author has not allowed any of the interesting strains of fact and fiction, found in her other volumes, to escape from this. Brown, Eager & Hull, 50c.

Poesy.

Aurora Leigh, and other poems, by Elizabeth Barrett Browning, illustrated by Frederick C. Gordon, and published by the Frederick A. Stokes company, New York, is an interesting story told in most melodious poetry. "A Drama of Exile" refers to Adam and Eve flying from the wrath of their Maker at the gates of the garden of Eden. It is an intellectual as well as artistic work. Brown, Eager & Hull, Toledo.

"Rings and Love Knots," by Samuel Minturn Peck, is a dainty volume of poems bound in white, gold and heliotrope.

It is published by Frederick A. Stokes company, 182 Fifth avenue, New York.

For sale in Toledo by Brown, Eager & Hull.

For the Little Ones.

Frederick A. Stokes company, New York, have published some delightful Child's stories, some of the best being Maud Humphrey's Book of Fairy Tales, beautifully bound and handsomely illustrated.

"The Bunny Stories," for young people, by John Howard Jewett, with 78 illustrations by Culmer Barnes, has been published by the Frederick A. Stokes company, of New York. It is brim-full of wit and humor and will prove very interesting to the children during the cold fall and winter nights. Aside from its catchy wording, it points a moral and leaves an impression for good on the mind of anybody who reads it. Brown, Eager & Hull; price $1.75.

A more beautiful publication for the young than "Our Little Ones and the Nursery" cannot be found. Published monthly by the Russell Publishing company, 196 Summer street, Boston.

Harper's Young People (published weekly) has a number of handsome illustrations this week, whilst its poems, stories and other features make charming reading for young people of both sexes. Five cents a copy, or $2 a year.

The variety of topics and excellent illustrations make the "Youth's Companion" everywhere welcome. The November number continues the serial "How Dickow Came by His Name," beside the usual short sketches. The Companion is in its sixty-sixth year, and is published by Perry Mason & Co., 201 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass., Price of subscription $1.75 a year.

A Strange Story.

"God's Fool," by Maarten Maartens, is as queer as the name indicates.

It is the story of the sad life of an unfortunate being, deprived of all the senses except hearing, and a stammering speech. His mind is clouded, he is blind, and he is rich.

The story ends very abruptly, as though the author himself had grown weary of the tale.

Its very weirdness, however, so fascinates the reader that he is loth to lay it down after once beginning it. Brown, Eager & Hull, Toledo.

"A Confederate Spy," a thrilling story of the civil war, is told in an interesting fashion by Thomas N. Conrad, and published by J. S. Ogilive, 57 Rose street, New York.

Magazine Notes.

The Arena for November is a specially good number of that most excellent magazine.

The frontispiece represents Joaquin Miller at home.

Lord Salisbury's Afghan Policy, by Rev. Thos. P. Hughes, D. D., is a very able article, as are also "The New Education, and Its Practical Application," by Prof. Jos. Rodes Buchanan, M. D.; "Physical Research, Its Status and Theories," by Rev. M. J. Savage, and "The Volume of Currency," by N. A. Dunning.

The Arena Publishing company, Boston, Mass., Pierce building, Copley square; $5 per annum; single number 50 cents.

"Sweet Bells Out of Tune," is the title of the story begun in the November Century, by Mrs. Burton Harrison. It promises to be very interesting.

Table Talk for November is a Thanksgiving number.

The excellent recipes in this splendid magazine, are all prepared by Mrs. S. T. Rorer, and are vouched for by her.

Issued by the Table Talk Publishing company, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Poet-Lore company, 196 Sumner street, Boston, have just issued the November number of Poet Lore, a monthly magazine devoted to letters and to the study of Shakespeare, Browning and comparative literature.

Price $2.50 per year; 25 cents single copy.

The opening number of the New Peterson, a purely literary magazine, does great credit to the publishers, and the old subscribers to Peterson's welcome with pleasure its development on a higher plane.

The Peterson Magazine company, Philadelphia; $2 per annum; 20 cents single copy.

The New Moon for November, contains some interesting short stories.

The New Moon is a very popular magazine, published monthly by the New Moon Publishing company, Lowell, Mass.; $1 a year; 10 cents a number.

The College of Social Economics, New York, are receiving many compliments on their excellent magazine, the Social Economist.

No student of economics can afford to be without it.

Published monthly at 34 Union Square, East, New York; $2 a year; 20 cents a number.

The American Journal of Politics, a magazine for intelligent men and women who read and think on the vital questions of the times, is edited by Andrew J. Palm, and is published monthly at 114 Nassau street, New York.

One year $4; single copies 50 cents.

It is one of the best literary magazines published, and is being recognized as such.

The St. Nicholas for November is the beginning of a new volume.

It is one of the best and cleanest magazines for little folks.

The Century company, No. 331 East Seventeenth street, New York; $3 a year; 25 cents a copy.

New Year's Beauties.

The beautiful calendars sent out by the Frederick A. Stokes company, remind one that 1893 is near at hand.

The watermelon calendar looks good enough to eat, and the Fairy calendar, with fac-similes of water color designs by Maud Humphrey, is a work of art.

The Housekeeper's Weekly, of October 22, has a very fine portrait of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, besides containing House and Home Talks, by Marion Harland; The Library Table, Kitchen and Dining Room, fashions, etc. Brown, Eager & Hull.

"Our Dumb Animals" is finely illustrated and full of entertaining reading.

"Admiral Farragut," from the house of D. Appleton & Co., is by Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. navy. It is accompanied with excellent portraits and maps and lives the life over again of the brave commander. Brown, Eager & Hull, Toledo.

"Thought Throbs," published by John P. Morton & Co., is from the pen of Creedmore Fleenor. It is a book of poems and the recalling of the Johnstown flood is very touching and very beautiful. For sale by Brown, Eager & Hull.

Contents of the "Unknown Library:" A New England Cactus, A Case of Love, The Courageous Action of Lucia Richmond, A Middle-Aged Comedy, A Belated Letter, Olive and A High Ideal. This is a neat little volume in linen back and is published by the Cassell Publishing company. Brown, Eager & Hull, Toledo.

"Delights of History," edited by Edward Eggleston, refers to the work of Columbus. It is replete with maps and illustrations and in this Columbian year is of unusual interest. It should find ready sale. Brown, Eager & Hull, Toledo.

Hypnotism, by Jules Claretie, and published by F. T. Neely, of Chicago, is one of the most interesting books that has lately arrived on the Bee book table. It treats of the magnetic powers of man over man, and to students of the present day it must prove decidedly interesting. It is charmingly written with the thread of interest running from the first to the last page. Brown, Eager & Hull.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The man goes into the dry goods shop
With a stern, exacting eye;
He doesn't go in to laze or lounge,
He simply goes in to buy.
He buys what he wants, and out he goes,
Be it tie or handkerchief, cuffs or hose,
And does it all, I do declare,
In just five minutes, and time to spare.

Please, dear little lady, don't make a fuss—
That is the story that man tells us!

The woman goes in at half past nine
And stays till it's almost time to dine;
She makes the "floorwalkers" lose their wits,
And works all the salesmen into fits.
Then, when the shopmen are filled with pain,
She says she'll probably call again.
She hasn't a cent but her fare, you see,
So the paper of pins goes "C. O. D."

I wouldn't get angry if I were you,
It's the wretched man who asserts this, too!

VIGOROUS PROTEST

Against the Use of the Telephone Automaton.

The Hello Girl Has a Hold on the Affections

Of the Susceptible Male Creature—He Regards the Automaton as a Nuisance.

Toledo telephone girls are in danger of losing their jobs.

The perfection of an automatic device which does away with the telephone girl, is among the latest inventions, and while it is very favorably regarded by many people, there are others who look upon it as an infringement upon the rights of all telephone subscribers of the male persuasion.

A vigorous protest against the use of this ingenious device, to deprive the telephone girls of a job, was made the other evening at the Hamilton by Charley Sigerson, a drummer, who always patronizes that hostelry, when in Toledo.

"I don't like the idea of an automaton," he said, "and I don't believe it will work.

"I would about as soon have an automaton for a sweetheart, as for a telephone girl.

"What satisfaction would a man get swearing at an automaton?

"I don't see how it's going to work all the combinations. There's nothing on earth can work a combination like a girl, anyhow.

"I know a prominent young real estate man in Toledo, who calls up a telephone girl every evening, and asks her where she is going after supper.

"What kind of use would an automaton be to that man.

"When a man has been out all night what good will it do him to call up central to ask where he lives?

"The automaton wouldn't be in it, when it comes to giving out the kind of information that most men need.

"The girl at the telephone exchange has something else to do besides attending to her switches—telephone switches, I mean.

"She's a sort of human information bureau. She is expected to know everything and be ready and willing to tell it on short notice.

"There is positively no limit to the questions Central is obliged to answer.

"I know people who call up Central to find out what time it is.

"And then there are others who want to know what time Central goes to supper and what time Central gets through work for good.

"How could an automaton satisfy these inquiring minds?

"There is a drummer who generally puts up here when I do.

"The first thing he does when he gets in is to go to the 'phone, and here is the diff of the conversation: 'Hello, Central, is this Central? Well, I don't want you; I want the other Central.' The 'other Central' evidently comes. 'Is that you, Central?' he again calls. 'It is you, without doubt.' 'Yes, it's me. Just got in five minutes ago. How have you been, well?'

"'Say,' after some unintelligible remarks, 'is this your night off? All right. Meet me at the drug store at 8 o'clock. Tell your mamma you've got to work.' Then he rings Central off.

"What's a man going to do when his wife's in the office and accidentally goes to the telephone and hears another woman's voice?

"He can't say it's Central because that blankety blank automaton can't talk.

"It is no good, and you mark my word, the administration that allows the telephone girl and the typewriter girl to be abolished will witness a landslide to which the one of November 8 won't be a circumstance."

A NEW DEPARTURE.

Toledo has now passed the one hundred thousand mark and has been placed on the metropolitan list. There are as many people of wealth and position in Toledo as can be found in any city of the same rating and our enterprising merchants are always abreast with the times, and you can purchase as fine wares of every description in Toledo as may be found in the great metropolis, New York, and as a connoisseur W. E. Cawood, the jeweler, has added to his stock of fine Watches and Diamonds, a Jeweler's Art department consisting of imported French hand-painted Music Cabinets, Tables, Swedish Inlaid Stands and Desks, etc. Mr. Cawood will also have for sale a fine collection of Framed Etchings, Water Colors, Photogravures on Satin, and with his fine selected collection of Royal Art Pottery, Toledo connoisseurs cannot help but find a visit to Mr. Cawood's store quite interesting.

PRETTY ANNIE MURPHY.

She Is Leading the Officers a Chase.

Her Smiling Ways Allows Her to Get Away With the Cash.

Houlton, Me., Nov. 18.—A black-eyed, handsomely formed woman of 30, giving her name as Annie Murphy, has recently been in Aroostock county searching, she said, for her long-lost father, whom she had traced to that locality.

She came from Tacoma, Wash., and was plentifully supplied with cashiers' checks from the First National bank of Tacoma.

These checks to the amount of $475 were accepted at the bank in this town and citizens took them for small sums, and the woman disappeared. Yesterday a telegram was received from Tacoma saying that the checks were bogus.

Telegrams from Minneapolis say that similar checks have been passed there. Annie Murphy is also wanted for passing bogus checks on the Chase National bank of New York, and at St. Cload, Minn. She is said to be a step-daughter of the Hon. Andrew McCrea, of Minnesota, and the New York authorities believe she is the leader of a gang of bank swindlers.

FINDLAY.

Superintendent of the Toledo Gas Pumps Breaks a Leg.

Findlay, O., Nov. 18.—(Special)—The trial of James Lawson for the murder of Harry Scouten, several months ago, will be commenced in common pleas court next Monday. A special venire of jurymen will be drawn.

Joseph Conway, of Danville, Va., and Miss Mary L. Conway, daughter of a wealthy farmer of near Carey, were quietly married in the parlors of the Hotel Marvin last night.

W. H. Geddes, of Pittsburg, who is superintending the erection of the mammoth gas pumps for the Toledo City Gas company at Van Buren, while coming into the city last night had his left leg broken just below the knee by a kicking horse attached to a cart he was driving. He will be laid up several weeks.

John Thompson, an employe of the Peerless refinery, had a narrow escape from death yesterday by being overcome with gas in cleaning out a tank car.

Joseph Wood, aged 82 years, died last night at the county infirmary. Remains taken to Dunkirk for interment.

Henry Dryer, an aged and respected citizen, was buried yesterday. His age was 81 years.

DESIRES TO BEAR TESTIMONY.

Henry Thorne, traveling secretary of the Y. M. C. A., writes from Exeter Hall, Strand, London, February 2, 1888:

"I desire to bear my testimony to the value of Allcock's Porous Plasters. I have used them for pains in the back and side arising from rheumatism and other causes, never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied and very comforting. Those engaged as I am in public work which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature will do well to keep a supply of Allcock's Porous Plasters in their portmanteaus."

MURPHY DENIES IT.

Troy, N. Y., Nov. 18.—Mr. Edward Murphy, jr., chairman of the democratic state committee, in an interview to-day with a representative of the United Press, denied the statements made by Mr. Shearman with regard to Mr. Cleveland's remarks at the recent Victoria hotel dinner, in which the latter is quoted as saying to Lieut.-Gov. Sheehan that he would be damned before he would give such pledges as the democratic machine demanded.

THE SMOKE NUISANCE.

What a Manufacturer Has to Say on the Subject.

To the Editor: The statement is made by one of our city papers in a report of the meeting held in the office of the Woolson Spice company on Tuesday evening, that "Not one of the many letters read on that occasion showed a perfectly successful device for preventing or consuming smoke."

I was present at the meeting on Tuesday evening and in answer to this statement I send for publication a transcript of a letter from the Michigan Stove Works replying to a request sent them for their experience with a mechanical stoker of the Coker class, long in use in their works. This letter was read on the occasion referred to as follows:

THE MICHIGAN STOVE COMPANY.
"Detroit, Mich., Nov. 14, 1892.

"Dear Sir: In reply to your favor of November 5 asking us to answer the questions enclosed therein, we would say we have written in the answers and herewith return the same to you, hoping it may meet your approval.

"This question of doing away with smoke is one that has long interested us. Your city has made no mistake in passing a smoke ordinance, and we assure them they can do away with this nuisance and at the same time do so with a profit to the very ones who are now creating the nuisance. Our works are situated among fine residence properties, and not wishing to get their ill-will, and having long known that smoke generally, and ours in particular, was but evidence of incomplete combustion, we decided, if it was possible, to do away with our smoke.

"This was long before our city had thought of a smoke ordinance, and we were the first to practically demonstrate that the largest manufacturing plants can be run (using bituminous coal) without any smoke at all.

"So in 1882 we put in the device that has been in constant use since that time and has worked to our entire satisfaction.

"In 1885 it became necessary to increase our power, and we put in another boiler of 150-horse power and another furnace, both being exact duplicates of what we had: and while we are now burning eight tons of soft slack coal and melting and finishing into stoves 70 tons of pig iron per day, no one can tell by our chimney whether our factory is running or not. And because of the complete burning of the fuel our furnaces have saved us their cost many times over.

"Any other information you may desire on this subject we will cheerfully give.

"Yours very truly,
"THE MICHIGAN STOVE CO.,
"Per J. W. Keep, Supt."

In reply to "Questions" referred to, the firm state: "The effect of smoke prevention has been to decrease the cost of repairs and add to the life of our boilers because the heat is a steady heat."

Also "That this device is adapted to application to all boilers;" "that the type of boiler makes no difference in its application."

The same testimony comes from the Paige Tube company, of Warren, O., with the use of the Rooney stokers, which are affirmed as "absolutely smokeless."

Col. Smead struck the right note for the solution of this problem when he states that this can only be accomplished by perfect combustion of fuel. "When this is done you don't burn the smoke, you simply don't make any smoke."

It is precisely upon this principle that the automatic stokers of the Coker class are based. The fuel is fed to the flame continuously, evenly, by progressive movement, and is directly consumed without creating smoke.

The testimony upon this is abundant and conclusive, and includes several interesting phases.

First—That cheaper fuel can be used with best results as to power of heat.

Second—That less fuel is required by these devices than by hand-stoking.

Third—That these mechanical stokers add to the life of boilers because the heat is steady and that the danger from boiler explosions is greatly lessened.

Fourth—That no smoke is formed and consequently none to consume.

Fifth—That in the formation in these chimneys of deleterious gases—mainly carbon binoxide—chemical experts who have tested these smokeless chimneys declare there is no evidence of this or other noxious gases whatever.

As suggested, there are many devices for the consumption of smoke, some of them useless and some of them dangerous, and it is well that manufacturers should go carefully in experimenting.

But none of these criticisms apply to the Coking stokers, which have been thoroughly tested and used for so many years, that they have passed beyond the experiment stage into that of proof.

Evidently the first cost of these successful devices is the barrier in the path of progress, but inasmuch as it is shown beyond question, and by abundance of testimony, that these pay for themselves in a comparatively short time, the public in requiring that the smoke producers do their duty, are imposing no burden.

These are the facts and should not, in wisdom, be overlooked. Let us meet this question on a safe and permanent bases at the outset.

A CASE IN COURT.

Prolonged Litigation Liable to Occur Over an Estate.

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 18.—Prolonged litigation is likely to attend the settlement of the estate of the late William M. Runk, the dry goods magnate who committed suicide some weeks ago, and who gathered insurance during his life to a total of nearly $500,000. The insurance is distributed between some eight companies and some of these have already refused payment on the ground that by ending his own life the unfortunate man violated the terms of his contract, and invalidated his insurance.

Some of the policies contain a clause by which suicide fails to be a bar to payment of the insurance after the lapse of two years, and in four of the policies these clauses would have gone into effect if the unfortunate man had postponed his act of self-destruction for a week, and his widow would have been benefited thereby to the extent of at least $100,000.

So far payment of policies aggregating $160,000 has been refused, the amounts being divided between the Mutual, of New York, the Home Insurance Co., of New York, and the Travelers', of Hartford. The estate has retained able counsel, and what promises to be a prolonged period of litigation, spreading over years, and doubtless reaching the United States supreme court as a finality, will be inaugurated within a few days.

BURNED AT SEA.

London, Nov. 18.—Several lives have been lost by the burning of the collier Prearby, bound from Glasgow, Scotland, to Bordeaux. When near Brest the vessel caught fire and went down. Eleven of the crew were saved, but the mate is known to have lost his life and the captain and fireman are missing.

THE TENNESSEE.

Father Sherman Addressed the Soldier Boys.

St. Louis, Nov. 18.—The last session of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee was held yesterday morning. Father Sherman, son of the late General Sherman, addressed the society. The reports of the committees appointed yesterday were called for. The committee on officers for the ensuing year reported as follows:

For president—Gen. D. M. Dodge.
Recording secretary—Gen. C. Cadle.
Corresponding secretary—Gen. A. Hickenlooper.
Treasurer—Gen. M. F. Force.
Vice-presidents—Gen. A. L. Chetlain, Gen. D. B. Henderson, Col. O. L. Jackson, Major Charles Hepp, Col. Wm. B. Keller, Capt. A. L. Ogg, Capt. Vispas, Major Warner, Gen. F. V. Mullenburg, Gen. A. C. Ducal, Major Leo Rossican, Capt. W. R. Hodges and Capt. J. D. Voga. The report was adopted.

The committee on oratory reported that they had selected Gen. D. B. Henderson, with Gen. Poe, of Detroit, as alternate. Chicago was selected as the place for the next meeting but no time was specified.

INDIANA.

The Apportionment Flaw Before the Supreme Court.

Indianapolis, Nov. 18.—Oral argument in the apportionment suit has been heard by the supreme court. The case came to the court upon appeal from Henry county, where Judge Bundy's finding was, in effect, against the constitutionality of the legislative apportionment laws of 1891 and 1885. The attorneys who assembled to participate in the argument were: For the appellants (those who are defending the constitutionality of the law), ex-Judge W. E. Niblack Senator Turpie, Attorney General A. G. Smith, and ex-Judge Mellett, of New Castle; for the appellees (those attacking the apportionment law), Ferdinand Winter and ex-Judge Forkner.

After some formal discussion the court decided to allow five hours for argument. Judge Niblack began by expressing the opinion that the suit was brought under the misapprehension that the conditions prevailing in Wisconsin and Michigan were similar to those in Indiana. He said: "When you undertake to apportion the state you cannot go below counties; absolute equality to individual citizens is impossible and always has been. The purpose is not to give equal representation to individual citizens, but to the states without reference to population."

ABOUT NOMS DE PLUME.

Some Interesting Gossip as to the Real and Assumed Names of Authors.

It might be thought that noms de plume, or sobriquets—or, as the French call them, noms de guerre—are chosen haphazard fashion, but it is far otherwise in most cases. As much thought is often expended in their construction as ever was devoted to the title of a book. By far the simplest form, and these constitute a goodly number, consists of the initials of the author's real name, such as "L. E. L." (Letitia Elizabeth Landon), "G. A. S." (George Augustus Sala), and "B." (the late Lord Beaconsfield), or of some transposition of the real name, such as "Dalidocand" (for George Macdonald), and "Draw," which is simply Ward written backward. As another example of this I might mention, says a writer in London Tid-Bits, the famous prima donna, Mme. Trebelli, who has just died, and whose real name was "Gillebert," her nom de theater being her surname spelled backward, the initial "G." being omitted.

Most people, however, assume fictitious names. Many authors frame these upon the initials of their own names, thus: Annie Bronte wrote as "Acton Bell;" Charlotte Bronte as "Currier Bell," and Emily Bronte as "Ellis Bell." And I might here mention the interesting but scarcely known fact that Robert Burns was a nom de plume, the poet's real name being Robert Burness, but it has by right of usage become the family name, as in the case of Henry Irving and H. M. Stanley. Names of the opposite sex are often adopted, especially by lady writers, such as Mrs. Henry Wood, who used to write as "Johnny Ludlow;" Mrs. Cross, who immortalized herself as "George Eliot;" Mme. Dudevant, who held no mean sway in the literary and social circles of the last century as "George Sand," and Mrs. Stannard, who delighted the world not long since with the military tales of "John Strange Winter."

This is sometimes reversed and Algernon Swinburne has gracefully returned the compliment by hoisting a petticoat for his standard when he signs himself Mrs. Horace Manners. Perhaps Swinburne objected to Thackeray's comment upon his initials. It is related that Swinburne wrote some verses in a young lady's album to which Thackeray simply wrote "Two-thirds of the truth" under Swinburne's initials, "A. S." By the way, Sir Arthur Sullivan has dropped his middle name, Seymour, owing to the awkward combination of the initial letters of his full name.

Several well-known names owe their origin to some special circumstance; for instance, the cry of the leadsman when his line marked two fathoms of water, has suggested to Samuel L. Clemens his world-famed nom de plume of "Mark Twain," and Mlle. de la Ramee's mispronunciation of her own name, Louisa, when a child, has furnished her with the popular sobriquet of "Ouida." And here might be mentioned that John Rowlands, in signing himself H. M. Stanley, has taken the name of his adopted father.

Many names, however, are entirely due to individual fancy, no particular law or circumstance being concerned in their evolution. Such, for example, are the "Edna Lyall" of Miss Ada Bayley; the "Artemus Ward" of Charles F. Brown; to "Max O'Rell" of Paul Blouet; the "Henry Irving" of John H. Brodrib, and the "Lewis Carroll" of Rev. Charles Dodgson, the charming author of "Alice in Wonderland." Regarding the last, it is related that the queen was so delighted with the amusing fairy tale of "Alice in Wonderland" that she gave orders that the works of Lewis Carroll be procured for her. Her majesty's surprise and disappointment on receiving a parcel of mathematical works of Rev. C. Dodgson (who is lecturer on mathematics in Christ's church, Oxford), can easily be imagined.

Now we come to another class of pseudonyms where, instead of the names of persons, real or imaginary, some descriptive phrase or title or motto is employed. As examples of the first I might mention "A Lady of England" (generally contrasted into A. L. O. E.), the pseudonym of Charlotte M. Tucker, and "A Besieged Resident of Paris," owned by Mr. Labouchere. As for mottoes and titles, etc., the most famous of all, owing to the controversial war waged around it, is "Junius." No less than 51 persons have been credited with it, and, although the bulk of evidence points to Francis as being the author of the celebrated letters, it still remains a matter of dispute as to who really deserves that honor.

The "Iconoclast" of the late Mr. Bradlaugh, the "Historicus" of Sir William Harcourt, the "Runnymede" of the late Lord Beaconsfield, and the "Etonia" of Mr. Gladstone are others of this class which have become of historical interest.

Though not legally protected by copyright, pseudonyms are effectually guarded by literary etiquette, and it would constitute almost a sacrilege for any person now to appropriate any such title as "Boz," which has become by usage the exclusive right of the inventor, Charles Dickens.

TOLD BY AN OPIUM FIEND.

Hopes That Seem To Be Realized While the Spell of the Drug Lasts.

When I get up in the morning my face is bloated, swollen, and my acquaintances, some of them, say that it is the effect of liquor, but the more observant, those better versed in the ways of the world, say that it is morphine or the fluid extract from the poppy, and they are right. Do they blame me? Yes, they do. I am called a fool. I am told that I am throwing my life away. I am demoralizing my brain power and my nervous system along with it. I am told that I should let it alone, and to add weight to their argument I am told of all the horrible and frightful ends of the most frightful malady. Those who tell me about it have not had the experience; they go by observation. I have had both observation and experience. Is there any reason why I should not know and why I should not appreciate the results of an imbibing of opiates? All that my well-meaning advisers tell me is true, yet when I retire from my work, a siege varying from 14 to 18 hours out of the 24, I get to my dingy little room and find relief only in my little bottle of opium, or in a morphine tablet. It is very odd, it is unreasonable some will say, that a man with brains enough and perhaps a trifle above the average capacity would thus resort to deliberately breaking himself down. But this is an old story.

Do I take my medicine with anxiety and pleasure mingled? No, it is with a feeling of repulsion, and as I tip my head back, draining the very last dregs from the glass, a feeling of dejection and remorse fills me. I think of what my dear mother would say if she knew, and I sometimes think, yes, believe that she is looking down on me. I can see her face full of compassionate sorrow, and that deep, holy love that only a mother can entertain for a son. I see at such times the mistakes I have made during my life, and though there has been nothing incriminating, I have not been an angel. The poison has been taken, and the spree between that time and when it takes effect is not of the most agreeable. The word remorse is not strong enough. I am too ambitious, perhaps, and lack one quality or feature which pushes a man to the front. I do not get along fast enough, and my salary is too miserably and insultingly small.

As I think these things over with all the bitterness there is in them, the opiate takes effect and distracts my attention from what I please to term my misfortune. A kind of numbness creeps over me and seems to take possession of my whole system. The sensation is not pleasant, nor is it disagreeable, for I know what is coming.

Oblivion creeps over me, and the hell of this world, if it can be termed so lightly, is gone, and I enter a life, an existence, that I have seen in my earlier worldly experience, and I am in my own hemisphere.

In my fancy I live the life I would live in reality. No, there is no extravagance, no dissipation in my imaginary life; all is as comfortable and respectable as the most exacting and proper could wish. My occupation is such that I have no chance to indulge in social pleasure, for at the time for receptions and social calls I am the busiest, and I make no effort to cultivate elevating female society, because I know I cannot follow it up. One reason I couldn't follow it up, and more, my salary is too small. I could not move in the society I would.

In my dream life I have only my joy. Whenever I enter that existence I am, to use the only expression, "Out of sight." I have been seated by fair women at tables ladened with the luxuries of life. I have talked with brilliant men at the banquet table, and though I never take a leading part in any such demonstrations I enjoy it and follow it in the even tenor of my way. At other times I will be at my home, a little place I have pictured out in a quiet part of the city, enjoying the comforts that are to be found only in that modest little cottage. My home, my mythical home, is not a gorgeous affair, but it is so happy. It is furnished in that quiet, rich taste that only a true, loving and wise wife can show. Quite often, while we sit there, the little one that has been born to us will utter a cry in her sleep, and the ever thoughtful mother will go and bend over the cradle. Soothing words with looks from her eyes beaming with maternal love quiet the little thing. The care and the responsibility that are placed on us by that little treasure draw us closer together, and our love is infinite. Again I will drift into channels of my daily occupation, and I struggle on as I do in my daily life, but the results are reversed and I meet with reward and am happy. It may be that at such a time I am single, as I really am, and will find myself in the society of my ideal of womanhood, who in my real life I have never met.

All of these most happy events and situations does the opiate bring me, impressing themselves most vividly upon the mind.

When consciousness returns I awake with a heavy, dull sensation in my brain, and I am unable to determine whether what has impressed itself is true or not. I stretch and rub my swollen eyes, and the truth of the situation is upon me. The blood courses hot through my body, feeling as though hot irons were applied to the pulse. Thoughts cannot be collected, the memory is impaired and the daily grind is before me. Mental and physical exhaustion follow, and then the worst—pay day. "Is there any relief to be secured?" I debate the question with myself. "Yes, there is." Then 'No;" then "Yes," and my hand reaches again for the fruit of the poppy.

FATE OF A FAMOUS ACTRESS.

A Story More Romantic Than Dumas' Fictions.

In the preface of his new edition of the "Letters of Adrienne Lecouvreur," M. Georges Monval, the learned and acute archivist of the Comedie Francaise, furnishes more information as to the life and especially as to the death of that amiable and ill-fated actress than has hitherto been available. It has long been believed and MM Scribe and Legouve have set it forth on the stage that she was poisoned by the duchess de Boullion through jealousy of Maurice de Saxe. In point of fact, this is a question which it is extremely difficult to settle. M. Monval has unearthed the police reports of the affair in the archives and library of the Arsenal, and finds in them a story more romantic than anything Dumas ever wrote. Leaving out all the minor details of oaths and masks and midnight meetings, the main facts in the case seem to be these: The duchess of Bullion employed a humpbacked abbe named Simeon Bouret to carry to Adrienne Lecouvreur a box of lozenges, probably poisoned. Bouret promised, but afterward repented and gave warning to the actress. At once a great scandal arose. The duchess vehemently denied the charge and complained to the lieutenant of police, who promptly shut up the unhappy Bouret in the underground cells of the Bastile. While the scandal was at its height Adrienne died suddenly, and the public was not slow to connect her death, which was possibly accidental, with the incident of the lozenges. Her hasty and rude burial, in unconsecrated ground, with no funeral rites, in a grave filled with quicklime, confirmed the suspicions of some. But this was only the common burial of a player; even Moliere came very near sharing it with her.

CINDERELLA SLIPPERS.

For Eighteen Dollars One Can Be Preserved in Silver for the Mantal.

Modern Cinderellas do not lose their slippers coming down castle staircases; instead they give them away, delivering them into the hands of him who takes the place of the prince or sending them to his rooms by a messenger boy. The slippers thus presented are the same that have graced a shapely foot during many a gay short hour of frolic and dancing, and in memory of which they are kept as a souvenir; while in some cases there is still a more romantic episode connected with this trifle of satin and leather. For instance, a half hour in the conservatory and a question asked and answered. They are really the same, although they look quite different, having passed through the hands of the chemist and silversmith in order to make them suitable for a mantel decoration. As they stand in all their bravery amid the hundred other furnishings of the fortunate one, they glitter as brightly as though coat after coat of black lead had not been administered before it was safe to dip them in the silver fluid. Eighteen dollars for one slipper is the price paid for this embalming, warranted to render everlasting a thing of perishable fabric.—Baltimore Herald.

WAKE UP!

If you wake up in the morning with a bitter or bad taste in your mouth, Languor, Dull Headache, Despondency, Constipation, take Simmons Liver Regulator. It corrects the bilious stomach, sweetens the breath and cleanses the furred tongue. Children as well as adults sometimes eat something that does not digest well, producing Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Restlessness, or Sleeplessness—a good dose of Regulator will give relief. So perfectly harmless is this remedy that it can be taken by the youngest infant or the most delicate person without injury, no matter what the condition of the system may be. It can do no harm if it does no good, but its reputation for 40 years proves it never fails in doing good.

A MOTHER OF TRIPLETS
Tries DR. HAND'S COLIC CURE and Secures Rest After Three Sleepless Nights

MARLBORO, Ohio, April 14, 1892.

The Hand Medicine Co.

DEAR SIRS:—Having used nearly four bottles of your Colic Cure, I forward you this testimonial, hoping it may benefit many mothers with suffering babies. I am the happy mother of triplets, all girls; now 14 weeks old. When they were about 3 weeks old they were taken with a very severe attack of wind colic. There were three days and nights I had two of them in my arms nearly all the time. I tried all the remedies I had ever heard of without any relief. A sample of your Colic Cure was handed me, which I used with the very best results, and I sent for more at once and I shall recommend it to every mother. I feel there is no language strong enough to express its value. I have also used several of the other Remedies and found each to be exactly as you represented them to be. I trust the Lord will forever bless you for procuring a remedy to relieve suffering innocence.

DO YOU WANT GOLD?

Cripple Creek is not a health resort. It is a wealth resort. Quite a difference! Location, near Pike's Peak, in Colorado. Gold—bright, yellow gold, is found at grass roots and in the rock formation.

Reliable experts claim this is to-day the richest camp in Colorado. Assays average $100 per ton, and have run as high as $5,000. One hundred people a day are now rushing to Fremont, chief town of the district.

The chance of a life-time is worth looking after!

You can get there quickly and comfortably by taking Santa Fe Route. Only line with no change of cars from Chicago. Kansas City and other principal cities to Florissant, nearest railroad station, with daily stages, to Fremont.

HUNTING THE MAN-EATER

Thrilling Incidents and Accidents Attendant.

One of the Party Caught by the Ferocious Animal and His Skull Crushed.

"Tell us some of your hunting experiences," I said to Capt. Fisher one night, says a Globe-Democrat reporter. The captain was a tiger-slayer of more than local repute, and I knew that a yarn from him was sure to prove interesting.

"All right," he said after a moment's thought and a meditative puff or two of his cigar. "I'll tell you about the first tiger hunt I ever took part in, which resulted in my declaring perpetual war on tigers; and, as you know, I think I've kept my vow tolerably well.

"I was at Singapore, and, I suppose, had seen about as much service as you have at the present time, and was quite as anxious to bag my first tiger. One day some villagers came in with the usual harrowing tales of the destruction and depredations committed by a man-eater on their cattle and families, and wound up with the customary request that we would help them get rid of the marauder. On investigation I found that one poor fellow's wife had been carried off the day before. I determined to seize this opportunity to do a good action, and at the same time gratify my own desire of overcoming the lord of the jungle. Telling the villagers to wait, I hunted up two of my special cronies, Lewes, a young newly-made benedict, and another young subaltern named Cole. Perhaps it is needless to say that they were quite as ready for the fun as I, and without delay promised to accompany me.

"We had agreed upon no plan of action, just seizing our rifles and cartridge belts and putting ourselves under the natives guidance. On the way to the village, however, we had a pow-wow and eventually concluded to secure a bullock from our guides and have him tethered close to the spot where the tiger's lair was supposed to be, expecting that he would not be able to withstand such a tempting bait, and that we would be able to polish him off without difficulty or danger while engaged in devouring his supper. Of course, any one that knows anything about the ferocity and cunning of a veritable man-eater could have told us that he would be sure to take human flesh in preference to any other, if it was to be had; but we were as verdant as grass, and, not having informed any of the more experienced hands of our expedition, had no one to advise us. The natives did as they were bid, conducting us through the low but dense korinda bushes to a place in the jungle where they supposed was the tiger's habitat, tethered the bullock in a small open space 100 yards wide, and then bolted precipitately for safer regions. We three then disposed ourselves around the edge of the clearing about 30 yards apart, I being in the middle, and awaited results.

"Not a sound broke the oppressive silence, unless I except an occasional plaintive note from the bullock, which doubtless bemoaned its isolation, and that ceaseless hum of the insects which invariably greets the ears of a sojourner in the tropics. As time went on a sense of uneasiness crept upon me which I could not account for, but which would nevertheless thrust itself upon me. My nerves became strung to their highest tension as I listened with straining ears for the slightest sound and peered anxiously in every direction. Presently a murderous roar broke upon the stillness, followed immediately by a low cry which came from Lewes' direction. The cry seemed as though it had been suddenly suppressed or cut short, and it was with the gravest forebodings that I made hurriedly toward the spot in which I knew he had concealed himself. When I reached it my worst fears were realized.

"There was my poor comrade lying, face downward, with the tiger standing over him. I had approached quite close, and Cole had done the same from the opposite direction. Even at that time I could see by his terror-stricken countenance that he feared the worst. However, this was no time for delay or thought. I raised my rifle and sighted for the tiger's heart. Just as I did so the beast, which perceived Cole's approach, launched itself at him, and though my shot told it was not fatal. For a moment I feared that there was going to be a second catastrophe, but a ball from his rifle, which we afterward found had entered his wide-open jaws and raked him almost, to put it in a nautical phrase, from stem to stern, stopped him short and laid him dead at my companion's feet. We now hastened to Lewes' assistance, but all our efforts to restore him were unavailing. Indeed, we should never have attempted it had we not been dazed by grief and sorrow, for the poor fellow's skull had been fractured like an egg shell by a blow from the man-eater's paw. Long we struggled, frantically but despairingly, to bring back some sign of life, making use of such means as were at our disposal and which our limited knowledge of surgery warranted, but at last the conviction forced itself upon us that all was useless, and we sadly desisted.

"'Who will tell his wife?" were the first words that either of us had spoken, and which came from Cole.

"'God knows,' I answered; 'but the first thing is to get him back to camp.'

"Neither of us had anything more formidable than a pocketknife wherewith to cut the necessary wood to construct a litter, and so it was agreed that Cole should return to the village for assistance and I was left alone with my dead comrade.

"Be very sure I shall never forget that gloomy watch, which seemed countless times longer than it really was. Over my friend's dead body I swore to avenge him by unceasing war on the tigers. Presently Cole returned with a hammock and bearers and with heavy hearts we proceeded homeward.

"Poor Lewes' body was taken to the hospital, and all that could be done to render the sight of it less distressing was performed there, and the cruel duty of informing his wife of her loss devolved upon me, for, having persuaded him to undertake the expedition, I felt myself bound to do that which every one else shrank from doing. I shall never forget her cheery invitation to enter as I knocked at her sitting-room door, or her bright smile of welcome as she asked me to be seated.

"'So you're back,' she said. 'Did you kill the tiger, Capt. Fraser? And, by the way, what have you done with our Charlie?'

"Then I suppose she must have noticed something unusual in my face, for she sprang from her seat and clutched me convulsively by the arm, crying piteously: 'Oh, he's not hurt? For God's sake, say he's not hurt.'

"But why tell any more? I broke it to her as tenderly, as gently as I could, but what can all our tenderness avail in such a case? For a moment she seemed stunned, and again for a time to lose her mental balance, heaping all kinds of bitter reproaches upon me, which, God knows, were hard enough to bear, for I did in some measure feel responsible for his death. To this paroxysm succeeded a fit of bitter weeping, which calmed her somewhat, and, seemingly oblivious or altogether ignorant of her late reproaches, she took my arm and said bravely, 'Take me to him.'"

PEOPLE IN PUBLIC LIFE.

Jason Brown, of Pasadena, Cal., a son of the famous Ossawatomie Brown, was an interested visitor last week at the Brown Fort Museum in Chicago.

Governor Lyman E. Knapp, of Alaska, is first in the field this year with a Thanksgiving proclamation.

Edward Blake, the Irish-Canadian statesman, who has entered parliament for the sake of advancing the nationalist cause, and who is looked upon as a possible leader in that movement, lectured recently in Boston. The Herald of that city says: "Like the late Irish leader, Mr. Blake is a Protestant and an aristocrat. He comes of a family that for generations held a conspicuous position among Irish landlords. In the rollicking days which Charles Lever loved to paint, the Blakes of Galway were widely famed, both in fact and in fiction, and were, indeed, as true types of the Irish country gentlemen of the time as could be found to the west of the Shannon. He has been premier of Ontario, minister of justice to the Dominion, and leader of the liberal opposition. He is one of the most eloquent orators of a race peculiarly gifted in that way, and what is somewhat unusual in a Canadian politician, no charge of political corruption has ever to our knowledge been laid at his door."

HISTORY OF A MEAL.

How and When the Ancients Did Eat and Be Merry.

It is believed by some that the word dinner springs from a corruption of the word "dixheures," indicating the time at which in the old Norman days this meal was taken. The mere idea of having dinner at the barbarous hour of 10 o'clock in the morning would in all probability send a modern chef into a fit, yet it was at this early hour that persons of quality, both in England and France, partook of the meal. Froissart mentions waiting upon the Duke of Lancaster at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, after he had supped, and during the reigns of Francis I. and Louis XII. of France fashionable people dined at 10:30 and supped at the latest at 6 o'clock in the evening. And again, from a Northumberland household book bearing date 1512, we learn that the family rose at 6 o'clock, breakfasted at 7, dined at 10, supped at 4 and shut the gates at 9 p. m.

Louis XIV. did not dine till 12, while his contemporaries, Cromwell and Charles II., took the meal at 1. In 1700 the hour was advanced to 2, and in 1751 the Duchess of Somerset's dinner time was 3. In 1760 Cowper speaks of 4 o'clock as the then fashionable time. After the battle of Waterloo 6 p. m. was the time at which the beau monde took their substantial meal, while at the present day many of the nobility do not dine until 8 or 9.

The Romans, in the time of Cicero and Augustus, took breakfast from 3 to 4 in the morning, a luncheon at 12 or 1, and at about 3 o'clock the coena or principal meal of the day, corresponding with our dinner. Consequently, we read of some not dining until sunset. A Roman dinner at the house of a wealthy man consisted chiefly of three courses. All sorts of stimulants to the appetite were first served up, and eggs were indispensable to the first course. Among the various dishes we may instance the guinea hen, pheasant, nightingale and the thrush as birds most in repute. The Roman gourmands held peacocks in great estimation, especially their tongues. Macrobius states that they were first eaten by Hortensius, the orator, and acquired such repute that a single peacock was sold at 50 denarii, the denarius being equal to about 17 cents of our money.

FASHION'S ADVICE TO WIDOWS.

Even if you are a widow, it will not do to cry your pretty eyes all red, and go forever in ugly black frocks. It would not please—him, dear; and it is not fair to the little girl. She ought to think of mamma as only pretty and dainty, and with the sweetest smile in the world in her eyes. She will learn soon enough that it is because of the tears that are not suffered to fall. Of course, you simply cannot think of "colors." They seem like a profanation just now. Yet in the house at least—for her sake anyhow you must give up the black. This dress is the softest lavender. It is in cashmere-like pattern cloth, stamped with straight wreaths of lilacs. The skirt is cut bias and so the wreaths run diagonally. There is just train enough to be dignified and graceful, with no dragging of yards for effect. The skirt is cut Princess shape to above the waist line, where it is finished all the way around by a fold of lilac ribbons. The short jacket is of lilac cashmere. The collars are faced with lilac silk, and a vest of softly drawn white or cream muslin shows. The jacket is held in place by cords of lilac silk, fastened by rosettes, which cross over the vest. The sleeves are of the material of the dress, and made very full at the shoulder, narrowing at the wrist, where they are finished by a tiny band of muslin like the vest. At the back the jacket effect is carried out, only the jacket is sewed down to the skirt part, to avoid the jauntiness that must go with the Eton style.

Your eyes will fill if I try to tell you that your pale hair will take new softness, and your eyes grow darker and brighter for the soft tint of the gown. But you should not let yourself feel so. You have—her to think of. People must not look at you and think "I wonder if the daughter will look so worn at her mother's age? You see, it will not do. FLORETTE.

MAKING SOUP FOR A LIVING.

The Profitable Venture Undertaken by a Woman Without Male Support.

One of the latest ventures is the old story of the incompetent gentlewoman whose first refuge is "taking boarders," with the usual failure. A friend who found it very difficult to get good soup stock for her dinners, and who believed that in other households there was a similar need, suggested to her that she should supply a dozen families daily with stock at 20 cents a quart. A rich, nutritious stock was made from beef, veal, bones and chicken and delivered to each customer. The first day's profits were 80 cents, soup and a fowl for the family dinner. In six months the number of customers had increased to 100. The next year "the stock house" was changed to a soup-house, 25 cents being charged for a quart, which, by the way, was rich enough to be diluted with one pint of water and still remain a very good soup. As the business increased it became necessary to have a cart to deliver the quantity ordered, and villages near the city were served twice a week. Soup depots were established in some of the most populous. A little printed card sent to customers announced a different soup for each day of the week: On Sundays there was consomme; Mondays, brown gravy; Tuesdays, vegetable; Wednesdays, noodle; Thursdays, Julienne; Fridays, tomato, and Saturdays, mutton broth with barley. "It is now three years since I embarked in the stock business," says the independent woman who started the venture, "years in which I have lived well, clothed my family and myself respectably, paid the interest on a mortgage and part of the principal, besides doing some necessary repairs, and I trust some good work in the way of thank offering." The success of this venture may suggest a paying employment to some woman or number of women in every town and city. For it, little or no capital is required at the beginning, and the article made is one for which there is a steady demand winter and summer. The supply is now limited to canned soups, the best of which are expensive. Those of low price are neither palatable nor nutritious.

TRUE HOSPITALITY.

It Springs From a Kind Heart Rather Than Good Breeding.

She was a young girl from the country, and did not understand city ways; so when invited to a reception she went at an unfashionably early hour. Entering the dressing-room she was dismayed to see not a cloak, not a wrap of any sort, only a well-trained person, who took off our country girl's wrappings and then disappeared. "Oh, I dare not go down," the little thing said, pitifully. "I can't; I am the very, very first." But instantly appeared a radiant white vision—the daughter of the house. "Christine said you had come," she said, fluttering in, as if it were the pleasantest and most charming surprise in the world. "I am so glad. Mamma and I were wishing we had some one to help us receive. And you did not see papa the other day. You must come right down and see him, and be one of us." Tears were in the country girl's eyes when she told me this little story. "Don't you think it was the loveliest thing?" she said. "There I was, an hour before every one else; and they made it seem as if I was their special friend and belonged to them; and everybody was introduced to me, and it was so lovely." Does it seem a little thing? I believe that many shining deeds recorded in the biographies of good women have had less real sweetness in them than this fashionable beauty showed to the girl whose evening she turned from a mortification into a triumph.

Afraid of Her Breath.

A bad breath spoils the beauty of a Venus.

There is a way to cure this affliction. It arises from a disordered stomach. Read what the celebrated Doctor Hofmeister said before the Medical Society of London:

"The unnatural motions of the stomach, causing pressure and belchings, the irritation of the intestines, resulting in catarrh of the bowels, and the inflamed mucous membranes, are the most fruitful of all known causes of disease.

"I have found that the unnatural motions of the stomach cease, the intestinal troubles become soothed, and health results from the use of Carlsbad Waters or Sprudel Salts. The diuretic effect of these remedies, its quiet action upon the lining of the stomach and its healing power upon the inflamed intestines are beyond all praise."

BRAIN WAVES.

A Curious Theory, Apparently Sustained by Experience.

I am living at the headquarters of a sub-division on railway construction, at the very outskirts of civilization, about 20 miles from the nearest station. About 10 days ago I went in to the station for a few days. On my way in I met a young police officer, whom I knew slightly, on his way out to take a post in the jungle beyond my headquarters. We had a short chat. I mentioned, casually, that I should return "on Monday." This was on Friday. In the station I heard incidentally that the same officer was ill at a small village between where I met him and my headquarters, and was coming in again. To this I attached no great importance. When leaving the station to return, about midday on Monday, I was seized, when a short distance out, with a strong feeling that someone was wanting me and that something was wrong. So strong was it I almost turned back, for I had left my wife in the station in not the best state of health. However, I put apprehension by, thinking that it was nervousness, and that I was a little "run down" with the hot weather. When I got about 12 miles out I fell in with a camp of some fellow engineers returning from survey from a different direction, and was asked by them to remain over night. Again I had the feeling that I ought not to stay; but as I knew of no reason why I should not remain, I put the feeling by and stayed the night. Next morning I heard that during the night the police officer had been carried through in a dhooly, and that he died just as he got in.

Now, the inference may seem to some people to be born of a diseased imagination; but I have little doubt that the poor fellow, who was lying at his last gasp, was thinking—in an excited and feverish way, perhaps—of myself, and his last hopes of seeing a European, and that he had a strong desire for me to come to him; that the thought wave was strong enough to reach me, and that, had my brain been attuned to receive it properly and interpret it, I should have gone on to him. The theory is in no way vitiated by the fact that the feeling was transitory, and that the poor fellow passing the camp in the night did not affect me. By that time he was probably not in a condition to emanate thought waves, nor did he know that I was there.—The National Review.

PHYSIOLOGY OF TEARS.

Different Emotions Result in a Flow of the Briny Drop.

Fear, grief and joy, to say nothing of pathos and anger, bring tears to the eyes. They are said to come from the heart, and this is true, for no one ever reasoned himself into weeping without a first appeal through the imagination to some emotion. Tears, according to the Asclepiad, are the natural outlet of emotional tension. They are the result of a storm in the central nervous system, giving rise to changes in the vascular terminals of the tear-secreting glands. These changes induce profuse excretion of water and weeping results. In a mild degree some excretion is always in process, to bathe the eye and clear it of foreign matter. The controlling center is at a distance, though the secretion may be kept up by the small trace of saline substance that is present in the tears themselves. The lachrymal glands lie between the nervous center and the mucous surface of the eyeball. Tears afford a good illustration of the way in which nervous fibers are capable of conveying to a secreting organ exciting impulses from both sides of a gland lying in their course. Afferent and efferent communications bring about a similar result. Internal nervous vibration and external excitation or reflex action cause a flow of tears. In both instances the exciting impulse is a vibration. Niobe, "all tears," and the unfortunate pedestrian with a minute particle of steel from the rail of an elevated road in his eye are unwilling exponents of a similar process. They weep the same kind of briny fluid in exactly the same way, though from widely different causes. Imagination is at times sufficient to excite the nervous system into the production of tears without external aid or reflex. Writers and readers of good fiction weep over it alike, and therefore the actor loses himself so entirely in the exigencies of dramatic art that he sheds real tears and the audience shed tears with him. Of a truth, the man who never weeps has a hard heart, and the quality of his intellect may also be questioned.

Emotion, then affection, grief, anxiety, incite to tears; not pain or discomfort. The pangs of maternity are tearless, though the influence of ether or chloroform may cause some emotional dream that results in weeping. In the earlier days of surgery patients might scream and utter such pitiful cries as to sicken the bystanders, might even faint with pain, yet there were seldom any tears. These being pure waves of emotion and a relief to the heart, are almost powerless to mitigate pain. Perhaps one who weeps from pain does so from unconscious though selfish pity—in other words from emotion. For the tearful, change of scene, mental diversion and outdoor life are the best remedies. The author quoted objects to alcohol as fearfully injurious. It disturbs and unbalances the nervous system, keeps up a maudlin and pitiful sentimentality and sustains the evil. Alcohol is the mother of sorrow. An opiate, however, prescribed at night, soothes and controls and really disciplines rebellious nerve centers. Sleep cures tears. And so does time, the restorer. Persons subject to many and repeated griefs forget how to weep, and the old as compared to the young are almost tearless. Tears have their value in the life of humanity, not as tears, but as signs. They show that grief centers are being relieved of their sensibility and that the nervous organization is learning how to bear up against sorrow.

THE PRINCESS MARIE AND THE CZAROWITCH.

The betrothal of the Princess Marie of Greece and Nicholas Alexandrovitch, czarowitch of Russia, is announced.

They are both very young, the czarowitch having been born in 1868 at St. Petersburg. He possesses more of the traits of his Danish mother than those of the Romanoff father.

The Princess Marie is but 16 years of age and was born in Athens; her mother was Olga, grand duchess of Russia.

The czar, as the head of the orthodox Greek church, has granted the special dispensation necessary on account of the pair being cousins.

The intimacy between the two no doubt ripened at Fredenborg, in Denmark, where the royal families of Russia and Greece go every summer to visit the king and queen. Here high revels are the order of the day, and dignity and state are for the time forgotten, while the large royal party enjoy themselves thoroughly in out of door sports and light jesting.

LOWEST FORM OF ANIMAL LIFE

Sponges Are Generally So Regarded by Scientists—How They Are Obtained.

Whether a sponge is to be classed as an animal or a vegetable is still a much disputed question. The sponges which you use at home do not seem to have much life in them. And they certainly do not look much like any animal with which you are familiar. Yet a writer in the Post-Dispatch says these sponges are hatched from tiny eggs, thrown off every spring by the parent sponge, and these atoms grow by and by to be big sponges like their mother. And although wise men have not quite agreed upon the subject, most of them have decided that sponges do belong to the lowest form of animal life, but one small step above the vegetables. And these sponges are found of all sizes, from the small specks, the baby ones, up to the huge fellows of three or four feet high. When the sponges are first hatched they spend a couple of days floating about in the water. Then they proceed to attach themselves to rock or shells, or any convenient place, where they hold fast and grow bigger and bigger all the rest of their lives, or until some spongefisher comes along with a big knife or a long fork and cuts or tears them from their resting place.

Sponges are obtained in various ways, and in many different places in the world. Large quantities are found in the Mediterranean and Red seas. Many are got in the Gulf of Mexico. And a long paper has been furnished lately to the state department showing the great extent and value of the sponge trade of the Bahama islands. In the Bahamas the sponge trade is an important industry. Very large numbers of people are employed in these islands in the work of gathering the sponges, handling them, clipping, washing and preparing them for market. From 5,000 to 6,000 persons are usually engaged, most of them, except the ship owners, workers and shippers, being natives—black men. Sponges are found either in shallow or deep water. In shallow water they are dragged off the rocks by a three-pronged fork, with a long handle. The finest and most valuable sponges are found in deep water, and divers go down to obtain them. This diver cuts them off from the rock carefully, being particular not to tear them. These are the most expensive sponges.

The amount of money made by the men who gather the sponges depends entirely upon the number they get. The work is very laborious, the prices paid are low, and the sponge gatherer who makes over $300 a year is a rare exception. The men who do the work on land of getting the sponges ready for market are paid about 50 to 75 cents per day, so it is not likely they amass a large fortune at the business. Around these islands about 500 small vessels are employed in the trade. These vessels, being filled with the men who do the work, cruise about until they have gathered and prepared a good cargo of sponges. The usual method employed in the Bahamas is by the fork, or hook, such as is used in the east. At one time dredges were introduced, but their use has been lately discontinued. The dredge was found to break off and destroy the young and unsalable sponges, killing the spawn and working great mischief. These smaller sponges are never taken, but are allowed to remain and grow to a large size. An act was passed forbidding the use of dredges. Great care is taken to protect the cultivation of sponges. The industry is of great value to the natives. A sponge seems a little thing. It is like many another trifle to which we have become so used that we no longer think of them as luxuries, more as necessities. Yet their services to us involves the labor of thousands of people in far-away countries, people who supply their own needs and those of their families from their labor on these little things.

TALLEST WOMAN IN THE WORLD

She Is Nearly Seven Feet Ten Inches High and May Grow a Foot More.

The Universal hotel, No. 75 Clarkson street, has the distinction of entertaining the tallest woman in the world. Aama Bataillard is her name and she is only 16 years and 3 months old. She measures 7 feet 10 inches in height.

Aama came to America on the Etruria, and arrived Sunday in New York. She will proceed shortly to Chicago, where she will go on exhibition.

Aama is considerably inconvenienced by her abnormal stature. She has to go gloveless, because the dimensions of her hands are 6 inches by 12 inches. Accurate measurements show that her feet are 16 inches long.

What is still worse, the doctors have prophesied that Aama may grow a foot or more before she matures. She rested comfortably while crossing the ocean by means of the function of two beds. The steward of the steamship pronounced her order, which is consistent with Aama's proportions.

The young woman's height is not hereditary. Her parents measure 5 feet 6 inches and 5 feet 3 inches respectively, and none of Aama's ancestors is known to have attained to her distinguishing altitude.

As a child Aama was unusually bulky. She grew up in a rural town near the border of France and Switzerland, and spent her youth in field labor. She speaks only a French dialect. She is a blonde, having scant yellow locks.

No scientific reasons have ever been assigned for Aama's unusual development. She weighs 210 French pounds, but has not yet been on American scales.

Aama has energy proportioned to her size. She can walk miles at a time and lift very heavy weights. She is not an expert at sparring or athletic arts, much to the satisfaction of her acquaintances. One is impressed with the dignity of Aama's presence, if she only stands and gazes in an impassive way at the liliputians about her.

A FORTUNATE SCHOOL TEACHER

One of the lady teachers in the High school has a dress that she is very proud of, for it cost her but a few dimes. It is only her old grey serge dyed a stylish navy blue, and worn with a cardinal silk vest made out of a last year's blouse dyed over.

She began it all just to see if Diamond Dyes really would do all that people said. She had no faith in home dyeing, and sending it to a dyer's was so expensive and annoying—but, once begun, she did not stop till she had an entirely new outfit. The colors are strong, beautiful and absolutely fast, and she knows that home dyeing is a success when done with Diamond Dyes.

PART MAN, PART RABBIT.

A Piece of Bone Successfully Grafted Into a Californian's Arm.

Bone grafting is a new thing, and the surgical world is slowly and cautiously feeling its way toward pronounced opinions about its propriety and safety as a remedial measure, says the San Francisco Examiner. The first operation of this kind made in San Francisco was performed recently upon a lumberman named Smith, and it gives such promise of success as to encourage both the operator and the subject. Smith was rolling logs in a saw mill on King's river, when a big spruce log became loosened and fell upon him, breaking his right arm at a point three inches below the shoulder joint.

The fracture was dressed, but in a few days Smith rebroke the partially jointed bone, and acting on advice went to San Francisco and submitted himself to a medical college professor who had a reputation for medical skill. After due study of the case the professor decided that in bone grafting rested Smith's only chance of a useful arm.

The process of making such a graft is neither long nor complicated. A healthy rabbit is taken and thoroughly washed in soap and water. The beast is then saturated, as to the hair, with a solution of corrosive sublimate in water to destroy any poisonous germ which might have remained in the coat.

The rabbit being perfectly "aseptic," as it is called, is killed by a blow on the neck, and the surgeon lays bare with a scalpel the long bone of the hind leg. The bone is cut from its place with pliers and thrown into a vessel full of corrosive sublimate, and all is then ready for the actual grafting. The patient is given ether until unconscious, and in such a case as that of Smith the arm is freely incised over the spot at which the break occurred. When the bone is fully exposed the ends of the fragments are well scraped, or if necessary bits are cut away so that the ends shall present clean, new surfaces.

When the scraping is finished the wound is thoroughly washed with an antiseptic solution, the washing extending to every part and being continued until it is certain that no particle of unsound flesh or bone remains. Then the rabbit bone is quickly pounded up in a mortar into fragments, which are thoroughly washed with a mercurial solution, and with the fragments of rabbit bone the space between the ends of the broken bone in the arm of the patient is packed. A final douche of antiseptic fluid is given and the wound is closed and left under light dressings, the arm being fastened to a splint.

If all goes well there is little or no inflammation. Evidences of healing are at once shown. The rabbit bone is partly absorbed and from the human bone are thrown out processes which enter into the bone material stolen from the rabbit. Blood vessels are formed in the new material, and in time a new and sound bone replaces that which was fractured and the man is restored to health and ability to make a living by manual labor.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
DR. DAVID KENNEDY, Rondout, N. Y.
MY DEAR SIR:—"I first used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, made at Rondout, N. Y., through the advice of a prominent citizen of Catskill, N. Y. I was very sick at the time with Liver and Kidney trouble; was very much run down. I had three different doctors attending me, but continued to grow worse. I had a talk with this gentleman, in which he described his symptoms, when he was sick, and I found they were similar to mine; I told him so, and remarked, "if that medicine has done so much for you, it ought to help me." So he got a bottle for me, and I commenced "experimenting" on myself. I use the word "experiment" because I think that is all most of the Doctors do. I quit taking the Doctor's medicine when I commenced "Favorite Remedy" but did not apprise him of the fact. The result was that before half the bottle was used I felt a change. Next time the Doctor called he observed it, and said:—"There is a Change—you are better," I said I was and he again prescribed for me and was to return in a few days. When he did he made the remark that I looked "so much better," and said he would have me on my feet in a short time. I then showed him the medicine I was using in place of his, and it made him feel very "sore." Of course he claimed it was his medicine that helped me, and that I would be glad to call on him again for help, but I have not done so yet. I can also add, that there have been instances where my great faith in the "Favorite Remedy" prompted me to give a whole bottle to persons to poor too buy it.
"I take summer boarders from New York City and Brooklyn, and I have recommended it to several of them, and I have yet to hear from the one that has not been benefited from its use.
Yours respectfully,
JOS. McGIFFERT.

NOTICE.

Andrew Patton and John Patton, whose place of residence is unknown, but who are believed to reside without the limits of the state of Ohio, will take notice that on the 9th day of July, 1892, the City of Toledo for the use of John T. Coghlin, filed its petition in the court of common pleas of Lucas county, Ohio, and which is still pending therein, and which is numbered 33312 on the docket of said court; the object and prayer of which petition is to enforce the lien of an assessment for the construction of sewer number 90 in Wisconsin street, against sub-division number (5) three of lot 803 of the Port Lawrence Division of the city of Toledo, Lucas county, Ohio. That said assessment was confirmed by the common council of said city of Toledo on June 30th, 1890, and the amount assessed against the said sub-division is ($31.00) thirty-one dollars. Said petition also prays for a sale of said real estate to pay the amount due on said assessment and the costs of this action. Said defendants are notified to appear and answer or demur to said petition on or before December 31, 1892.

MARKETS OF THE WORLD

The Hatch Bill Ably Discussed.

Does Speculation Depress Prices?

Quotations From All Over the World on What People Buy and Sell.

Senator Washburn, in his letter to Hon. Seth W. Cobb, of St. Louis, and in his New York Magazine article, continues to assume that speculative dealing in the products of the country depresses prices. The topic is too broad for our space herein, but we can refer to a point or two that will refute the senator's position, which is held by him either in utter ignorance of the laws and effects of trade or from motives of self-interest.

In a general way, what is the effect of active trading in any commodity, or in real estate? Is activity then a depressing element? Everybody knows it is not. Apply the rule to horses, cattle or hogs, or anything else.

Winter packing of pork at Chicago, and some of its products—ribs, for example—became irregular for delivery on contracts, at the season when new packing is traded in. The old pork is as good as the new, but declines in price largely compared with the contract pork, whenever it is made irregular.

Since harvest, notwithstanding the enormous movement of wheat which has depressed prices, the speculative grades of wheat, say No. 2, have been held above a parity with foreign markets and have not been exported. The active trading in these grades of wheat has kept up the price. There is no speculative trading in No. 3 and lower grades, and the price of No. 3 has been 10c below No. 2. Perhaps the senator can account for this depression on some other ground than the absence of speculative trading in these grades of wheat. No one familiar with the deal can do it.

We have before noted herein that the hard No. 2 wheat of Kansas is worth nearly as much as the No. 2 soft variety of winter wheat, but there is no speculative trading in it, and the price is 6c below the speculative grade, and has been since its advent in the markets. Will Senator Washburn please account for this condition? Harness the deal in all these products, with the proposed restrictions, and the farmers will at once be confronted with a loss on all the leading produce of the farm.

In consequence of the wind storm of last night and to-day we are unable to make our list of receipts complete. We can only compare the receipts at five western points, excluding the two northwest points. The receipts at these five points show a great falling off, being 237,831 bus, compared with 348,150 bus yesterday and 392,674 bus on the corresponding Friday in 1891.

The export clearances yesterday at four Atlantic ports were wheat 418,169 bus and flour to an aggregate of 500,000 bus.

English markets as reported herein are unchanged in price and dull.

The grain markets on this side have worked a new surprise to-day. Foreign markets are dull and unchanged in price, and foreigners are reported as sellers on this side. A strong bull party are advancing pork, and the just sentiment prevails that pork will not advance and leave wheat in the dirt. A probably report was started that Russia would issue another ukase prohibiting exports, which seems ridiculous in view of the late official rerideliculouscurfd twocomfwa hrdluupuppp port of their crops. But it is a good enough Morgan to frighten the shorts into covering.

Wheat closed at Chicago about 1c up.

Corn—The Kansas agricultural authorities state the corn crop of that state at 138,000,000. The crop last year was 141,893,000 bus. The markets to-day are firmer and close 1-4c to 1-2c higher in Chicago.

The wires are out of joint hence to New York and we can make no comparisons in the market.

In Chicago November wheat closed at 72 5-8; December at 73 5-8 and May at 79 7-8, a gain of 1c on each. November corn at 41 3-4, a gain of 1-2; December at 42, a gain of 3-8; May at 47 1-4, a gain of 3-8. December oats at 31 1-2, a gain of 1-2.

In Toledo we have had a fair amount of trading reported, in the speculative wheat deals, December and May. Opening prices were 1-4 up and the market gained slowly all day and closed at the best prices of the day. December wheat opened at 74 1-2 and closed at 75; May sold at 80 1-4 and closed at 81, a gain on each of 1c.

Cash wheat was dull. There was very little demand. Small sales of No. 2 soft reported at 72 1-2c early. At close 74 1-4c was the market, a gain of 314c; No. 3 soft sold at 66 1-2c, and closed at 67c. Sales in L. S. at 68 1-2c; rejected No. 1 at 62 1-2c; No. 2 at 56c. Sales in Wabash reported later at 60c.

Corn—No. 2, 43c; No. 3 at 42c.

Rye—No. 3 at 48 1-2c.

Clover seed was again strong and 10 to 15c higher, with rather less business. November sold at $7.95; December at $8.00; February at $8.00 and higher to buy; March at $8.10 to $8.15; No. 2 at $7.75 to $7.80.

CABINET TROUBLE.

Chile Continues to Have Her Trouble.

New York, Nov. 18.—A special cable dispatch to the Herald from Valparaiso, Chile, says there was an exciting debate in the chamber of deputies on the vote of confidence in the ministry. The conservative leader Kalos Walker-Martinez, said his party was not antagonistic to the ministry and would withdraw all opposition if the two intendants who interfered in the recent elections were dismissed. This the ministry declined to do. As they have a majority in the chamber now of four or five, the vote of confidence will be sustained.

TIBBALD TO BE HONORED.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 18.—A dispatch from Port Townsend says that W. H. Tibbald, jr., who managed the democratic campaign in Jefferson county so successfully as to make it the banner democratic county of the state, will likely be appointed by Mr. Cleveland to succeed Watson as collector of customs for the Puget Sound district.

THE STORY OF A CLOCK.

How a Timepiece in Temple Hall Was Furnished With a Motto.

The following account of the origin of a well-known motto for a timepiece, whether true or false, is worth recording.

Some years ago a new clock was made to be placed in the Temple Hall; when finished, the clockmaker was desired to wait on the Benchers of the Temple, who would think of a suitable motto to be put under the clock. He applied several times, but without getting the desired information, as they had not determined on the inscription. Continuing to importune them, he at last came, when the old Benchers were met in the Temple Hall, and had just sat down to dinner. The workman again requested to be informed of the motto; one of the Benchers who thought the application ill-timed, and who was fonder of eating and drinking than inventing original mottoes, testily replied, "Go about your business."

The mechanic, taking this for an answer to his question, went home and inserted at the bottom of the clock, "Go about your business," and placed it on the Temple Hall, to the great surprise of the Benchers, who, upon considering the circumstances, agreed that accident had produced a better motto than they could think of, and ever since the Temple clock has continued to remind the lawyers and the public to go about their business.—Manchester Times.

WARLIKE CURIOS.

Lieut. Peter Gibson has returned from an extended European tour, bringing with him a highly interesting collection of military curiosities and souvenirs, including weapons, ammunition, horse trappings and military literature. Among the arms brought over are specimens of the infantry rifles used by the principal European powers. The Mertal-Henry and Metford-Lee rifle, in use in the British army; the Mannlicher rifle, used by the German infantry, with smokeless powder and the German-silver tipped bullets; the Swiss repeater and the French Lebel rifle are among the collection. Lieut. Gibson has secured one of the Krag-Jorgenson rifles, of a somewhat different pattern than that recently adopted by the board on magazine arms of the U. S. army, but which illustrates the principles of the weapon for the future use of the United States army.

A "Lanchester" 45-calibre pistol, used largely by English officers, is also among the collection. This weapon is a curiosity to Americans. It is a four-barreled affair with fine shotgun locks, hammerless, and in place of the rifling found in the barrels of high grade American pistols, the barrels are ovaled, which is said to give the projectile the same rotary motion. The weapon closes at the breech, preventing the escape of gas. The weapon is a great favorite among the British officers, and it is claimed a higher degree of accuracy can be obtained in target practice than with revolvers of American make.

A complete set of horse equipments of the pattern in use in the British Life Guards, a high-power field glass as used by German officers, photographs and colored plates of the uniforms of European troops, of all arms of the service and every nation, the tactics, drill manuals and hand-books of instructions of every branch of the service in the English, French and German armies, help to make up the sum of Lieut. Gibson's plunder. A large number of cartridges for the new rifles, of the smokeless powder, and steel, iron, copper and nickel-tipped bullets were also brought along, and will be used in a series of military tests by Capt. Geiger, inspector of rifle practice of the First Infantry, O. N. G., and Lieut. Gibson, to be held in a short time. This test will consist of firing the new fangled projectiles with the new fangled powder out of the new fangled guns (also using the Springfield rifle and our own ammunition) into a new fangled target made of seven-eighths inch boards, with an inch of space between boards, to see how many can be penetrated by the different arms. The test promises to be a very interesting one.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES.

Excellent Musical Program Rendered at

The Catholic Club—New Century Club Meeting This Evening

Owing to the storm and the number of entertainments last evening, the Catholic club was not so largely attended as usual, and the paper announced to be read by Dr. Effer Obermiller was postponed until a later date.

However, a most excellent musical program was rendered, and an able paper on "Comparison of the Women of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries" was read by Miss Anna Petil.

The paper brought out an animated discussion, participated in by most of the members present.

A selection from Tennyson's Princess was charmingly recited by Mrs. Susan I. Moore.

The musical numbers were: Solo by Miss Mellink, "Garden of Sleep;" solo by Miss Alice Whiteford, "Speak, if You Love Me, Gentle Maid;" solo by Miss Alice Claire, "Leonora."

A humorous selection, by Miss Elean, provoked considerable merriment.

The regular program closed with the national chorus, after which the members enjoyed a social hour.

The Theosophy club met last evening with Mr. and Mrs. John Wheeler. A paper on "Faith by Science" was read by Capt. C. T. Bateman.

Mr. A. E. Macomber will read a paper on industrial changes before the New Century club this evening. The club meets with Dr. and Mrs. Cravens.

The Political Equality club meets tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon at 4 o'clock with Miss Katharine Calkins, 830 West Washington street between Ewing street and Lawrence avenue. All members requested to be present and strangers cordially invited.

The paper will be on the "Constitutional History of Ohio," read by the president, Mrs. Claude Q. Murphy, followed by a discussion and short parliamentary drill.

AT BROOK FARM.

Reminiscences of Hawthorne by a Member of the Community.

Much of the work of the first summer was making and getting in the hay from our very extensive meadows and fields. This was pleasant work, and I have very agreeable recollections of raking and otherwise working over many an acre in close company with Hawthorne, with whom I first became acquainted here, says G. P. Bradford in the Century. He, as I understood him, was attracted to the enterprise by the hope of finding some more satisfactory and congenial opportunity of living according to his tastes and views than in the common arrangements of society, and also of uniting successfully manual with intellectual work.

But he was, I think, disappointed in this, and found it not easy to combine writing with severe bodily toil; and as the former was so manifestly his vocation, he gave up farm work at the end of the first summer, and although he remained there some time longer, part of the following winter it was as a boarder, not as a worker.

The young people, as usual, had their admiration and their worships, and Hawthorne was eminently fitted to be one of these partly, from the prestige of his reputation, partly from a real appreciation of his genius as a writer, as well as from the impression made by his remarkable and fine personal appearance, in which manly vigor and beauty were combined. He was shy and silent, and, though he mingled with the rest of the company in the evening gatherings in the hall or parlor of the hive, he was apparently self-absorbed, but doubtless carefully observing and finding material for his writing.

The incident introduced into "The Blithedale Romance," which is commonly considered as giving the result of his life and observation at Brook farm—the drowning of one of his characters—with its ghastly features, did not really occur here, but in another place at some distance, and really had no connection.

THE PIPA AMERICANA.

One of the Most Peculiar Members of the Frog Family.

This animal raises its young in a very peculiar manner. The male pipa places the eggs on the back of the female, where they are held by a secretion from the skin until each one is inclosed in a little hexagonal case shaped like the cells of the honeycomb, and developed in the skin of the mother frog.

Each casing is closed by a little cover. In these little cases the 60 or 70 young of every pipa pass the 82 days which constitute their period of development.

The engraving is copied by the Illustrirte Zeitung from the seventh volume of Brehm's "Thierleben," which has lately been completely revised by Dr. Bolsche.

WHAT IF?

What if the currents of your life
Are rolled and vexed, and go amiss,
And trouble your whole portion is!
Faint not; all victory comes through strife.

What if dark clouds make up your sky,
And every wind's and tide's attack
Is pushing hard to beat you back?
Court not despair—still harder try.

What if your friends keep out of view,
And, while you sorrow, seem like those
Who wear the livery of your foes?
Fret not, but battle on anew.

What if a thousand shafts of wrong,
And grievous obstacles and hate,
Pursue you ceaely, long and late,
Yield not, but keep your courage strong.

What if the world seems simply made
To keep your dearest hopes away,
And balk your efforts day by day?
Care not—move onward unafraid.

What if your best work brings but pain,
Perplexity and loss and doubt?
Faint not, but fight the battle out;
No worthy life is lived in vain.

THE IRONY OF GREATNESS.

A plain, grave man once grew quite celebrated;
Dame Grundy met him with her blandest smile,
And Mrs. Shoddy, finding him feted,
Gave him a dinner in her swellest style.

Her dining table was a blaze of glory;
Soft light from many colored candles fell
The young, the middle-aged and hoary—
On beauty and on those who "made up" well.

Her china was a miracle of beauty—
No service like it ever had been sold;
And being unsmuggled, with the price and duty,
Was very nearly worth its weight in gold.
The flowers were wonderful—I think that maybe
Only another world has flowers more fair;
Each rose was big enough to drain a baby,
And there were several bushels of them there.

The serving was the acme of perfection.
Waiters were many, silent, deft and fleet;
Their manners seemed a reverent affection;
And oh! what stacks of things there were to eat!

And yet the man for all this honor singled
Would have exchanged it with the greatest joy
For one plain meal of pork and cabbage mingled,
Cooked by his mother when he was a boy!

FADED VIOLETS.

By A. R.

"Buy some violets—oh, do, please, buy my violets!"

The yellow sunset lay like a golden clasp across the fair disheveled hair that partook so nearly of its own liquid shine, while the clear blue eyes, looking upward with appealing wistfulness, were swimming in tears.

Poor little Allie Merwin! she was very tired and discouraged. Her first day's experience in flower vending had proved signally disheartening. The violets were fading away unpurchased in the basket, and Allie, wearied and sick at heart, still continued to importune the passers-by with her weak, unheeded cry.

"Come, don't stand here, blockin' up the sidewalk," gruffly spoke up a policeman. "Move on, why don't you?"

"But I haven't sold my violets," sobbed Allie, "and——"

"Move on, I say!" interrupted the policeman, "or you'll fetch up in the station house. Do you hear me?"

Allie shrank within her sheltering rags, with an instinctive, nameless terror, at the carelessly uttered threat, but the tears, so long repressed, were flowing fast down her dusty cheeks now.

"What's the matter, little one?" uttered a cheery voice, as a hand descended, not unkindly, on her shoulder.

"My—my violets!" sobbed Allie, looking down on the unsaleable wares.

"Violets, eh? Selling 'em? How much?"

"Five cents apiece," said Allie, wiping the tears away with the corner of her ragged shawl.

The boy—for he was only a tall, shambling boy, with clothes hanging loosely from the sharp angles of his thin frame, and dark eyes, shadowed with masses of heavy hair—took up one of the withered bunches.

"They don't look particularly inviting," said he, shrugging his shoulders; "but I suppose you're tired out, little one. Here—never mind the change."

He tossed a ten-cent piece into the basket and passed on his way. Allie looked first at the money, then at the retreating figure.

"He paid for two bunches and he only took one," pondered Allie. "I must run after him and give him the other."

But as Allie started on her pursuit, a skillful foot tripped her up—a deft hand dived in among the violets and vanished with the silver coin, and before the child could recover her balance she saw the disappearing rags of a bold little street Bohemian flutter round the corner.

"He has stolen it—all my money!" sobbed Allie, throwing herself on the pavement in an abandon of childish grief and despair. "And it was all the violets I have sold to-day!"

As she crouched there, her eyes obscured by tears and tangled golden hair, a vice fell close to her ear.

"Hallo! what's the trouble?"

"Poor little dear," chimed in a gentle tone. "Are you hurt?"

"N—no," stammered Allie, looking up into the kind, motherly eyes that shone through a pair of gold spectacles behind a misty thread veil, "but—"

And like an avalanche of incoherent words came the story of her loss.

"And Mrs. Peggs won't let me in to-night unless I have some money—and she beats me when I haven't sold all my things, and—and—I'm so tired and so hungry!"

"Dear, dear, dear!" ejaculated the portly old gentleman on whose arm the matron of the gold spectacles was leaning. "And where's your mother and father?"

"Never had any," promptly responded Allie.

"No relations? no friends?"

Allie shook her small head.

"Where do you live?"

"In Mrs. Peggs' cellar."

"My dear, my dear, this is very shocking," said the old gentleman to the lady. "It's dreadful, my dear," said the old lady to the old gentleman.

"We ought to do something for this little creature, my love," said the old gentleman, brandishing his gold-headed cane in the air.

"If she's not an impostor, my dear," said the old lady, cautiously.

"We'll find out—we'll investigate the matter, my love," returned the husband. "Little girl, can you read?"

"No."

"But your Mrs.—Mrs. Somebody can?"

"Bandy Jim can," answered Allie, innocently. "Mrs. Peggs can't—she has weak eyes."

The old gentleman laughed as he took a card from his pocket, and hastily scribbled a few lines on the reverse.

"Tell your Mrs. Peggs to bring you to that place to-morrow at noon—do you understand?"

Allie nodded, shrewdly.

"And here's another ten-cent piece. Now run along with your violets, for it's getting dark."

Perhaps the old gentleman expected thanks, or at least a look of grateful acknowledgment, but if so, he was disappointed. Allie snatched at the money, and shot away like an arrow, with the penciled card among her fading flowers.

"We will never see her again, my dear," said the old gentleman, shaking his head dubiously.

"Perhaps we shall—who knows?" said his more hopeful helpmate. "What pretty blue eyes she had, Jacob! Our little Lucy used to have just such eyes."

There was a momentary moisture on the crystal lenses of the gold glasses, and then the little matron took her husband's arm, and they were once more swallowed up in the great, eddying current of Broadway.

Meanwhile Allie Merwin, treading a variety of foul streets and obscure lanes, and skillfully avoiding the proximity of drunken wanderers, or watchful policemen, finally darted down a flight of mouldy stone steps, into the dismal precincts known in the neighborhood as "Mother Peggs' den."

A tallow candle, stuck in a broken-necked bottle, flared with sickly yellow lustre over the place, while a covered frying-pan hissed and sputtered on the fire. There was only one person in the room—a tall, overgrown girl of 17 or 18, who was poring over an old newspaper by the candle, and yawning fearfully.

"I'm glad you've come, Allie," said the girl. "I'm tired of this place. Just you look to the sausages till Mother Peggs comes back."

As she rose up, Allie caught at her dress.

"You can read, Marian," she said, eagerly. "Tell me what this bit of paper says."

Marian held the paper close to the flickering candle, and slowly spelled out the words:

"Mrs. Jacob Harrington, 17 Montley place. Who gave it to you?"

"I found it," said Allie,

Somehow there was a dim sense of honor and justice in the girl's heart that forbade her to expose Mrs. Jacob Harrington, whomsoever she might be, to the shameless begging and greedy importunities of "Mother Peggs'" social circle.

"Well, if that ain't the queerest go!" said Marian, throwing down the card.

"What do you mean?"

"Why, don't you know? they're going to—but hush! she's coming."

Allie crouched down, dimly apprehensive of the heavy hand which generally greeted her evening appearance. But Mrs. Peggs was in an unusually gracious mood on this occasion.

She was a diabolical-looking old woman, with one gray eye sparkling balefully under her grizzled eyebrow, and a rusty framework of black lace perched on one side of her iron gray hair.

"Ain't it too bad," she ejaculated to a heavy, stupid-looking man, who lumbered down the steps after her. "Stephy's in the lock-up—and old Jennings' boy is down with the measles—and there ain't another chap slim enough to go through the cellar windy."

"Can't you put it off?" growled the man, twisting a bit of straw round and round between his teeth.

"No; it must be druv' through to-night. I'll tell you what—I've got an idea. Allie, dear!"

Allie crept out of her lurking place, rather undecided in her movements, and very much astonished at the air of maudlin tenderness with which she was addressed.

"I didn't sell all my flowers," she said, defiantly; "but I brought home ten cents—and there it is."

"That's right, Allie—you always was a smart child," said the old woman, putting her two hands on Allie's shoulders, and scrutinizing the breadth of the little slender figure. "How should you like to go out with me and Tom and Bandy Jim to-night?"

"What for?"

"Oh, just a pleasant walk, honey, and p'raps a little business at the end of it. You're big enough to l'arn somethin' beside your matches and shoestrings and posies. Wouldn't you like a shillin' all o' your own?"

"Don't care," said Allie, indifferently. "Just as soon as not—only it's beginnin' to rain."

"All the better," said Mrs. Peggs, complacently. "'Tain't very far off, and if the place cuts up fat there's no knowin' but I may buy you a new caliker gown."

Allie looked down at her rags with a species of gratification rising in her heart.

"Where did you say it was?" asked the man, still chewing the bit of straw.

"Old Harrington's—17 Montley place."

Allie started convulsively. Mrs. Peggs turned short round.

"Now, why can't you set still? What's the use o' frightening a body out o' their wits? Get your old shawl—no harm in bein' ready."

"I don't want to go!" said Allie, recklessly. "I won't go!"

"Be still!" fiercely whispered the old woman. "You will go!"

Allie felt the iron hand clutching remorselessly into the tender flesh!

She had known well enough what was the service to be requested of her—but she had not imagined that kindly Jacob Harrington was to be the victim!

The rain was descending with slow, steadfast patter among the altheas in the area gardens of Montley Place, as the bell in some distant church tower chimes One! There was no other sound, save the slow, regular tread of the retreating policeman who never imagined the near vicinity of the group crouching behind the angles of the heavy grey stone steps.

"Now's the time," whispered Mother Peggs. "The bar is loose—Bandy Jim saw to that—just give it a pull, Tom! Now, Allie! run to the right at the foot o' the cellar steps, and unlock the front door as soft as if the key was made o' feathers!"

Obedient to the old hag's whispered commands, Allie crept, like a tiny serpent through the aperture formed by the vacant place of the removed bar, and dropped with noiseless feet upon the floor below. And then she darted up the stairs with a speed that astonished herself. But she did not stop at the front door, according to Mother Peggs' directions.

"Help! Murder! Robbers!"

The cry echoed through the house with a shrillness and distinctness that fairly frightened Allie herself, as she fled shrieking up the stairs.

"Help! help! the house is broken open! Mr. Harrington! Mr. Jacob Harrington!"

The next moment there was a flurried opening and shutting of doors—a tumult of voices and footsteps—and Jacob Harrington, issuing from his chamber door, almost stumbled over a little prostrate figure on the entry floor.

For the first and last time in her life, Allie Merwin had fainted! But not until her mission was fulfilled.

"Mamma, please fasten my sash! Am I dressed to suit your taste to-night?"

Golden haired, with serene blue eyes, and a skin like the inside petals of a damask rose, Alice Merwin stood there while the dress of floating blue cresses, caught up with white violets, looked like the diaphanous azure of a June sky. And Mrs. Harrington, smoothing the burnished braid of her adopted daughter's bright hair, looked with tender pride upon her fresh girlhood.

"Your dress is perfect, my darling. Papa will be very proud of his little girl to-night."

The words were scarcely spoken when old Jacob Harrington opened the library door.

"Are you ready, papa?"

"Not quite yet, pet. The fact is, I've got company here in the library—a certain artist-friend of ours, who has actually had the audacity to ask me for my little Alice's hand!"

How the crimson banners floated into her round, beautiful cheek! Mrs. Harrington involuntarily moved forward and laid one hand on her adopted daughter's shoulder.

"Jacob! our Alice is very young to leave us."

"Eighteen, aren't you, darling? Do you happen to remember, Dolly, just how old you were when we were married? Ah, my dear, young folks will be young folks! Go into the library, Allie, and tell Frank Tremayne just what you think of his impudence!"

"Alice! my own darling!"

Frank Tremayne never thought that he was wooing the heiress of Jacob Harrington's wealth; the petted belle and beauty of metropolitan drawing-rooms; he only knew that Alice's blue eyes beamed favor on his suit; that her sweet young heart was given over into his keeping!

"Say yes, Alice! Let me hear the word and be certain that the precious monosyllable comes from your lips! Do you love me, dearest?"

"I do love you, Frank. I have loved you longer than perhaps you have any idea of!"

"Since we met, last summer, among the everlasting shadows of those grand old Catskills?"

"Longer than that, Frank!"

"Impossible," he answered, with a tenderly incredulous smile. It was our first meeting."

"No, Frank, it was not. Do you remember an April evening on Broadway, years and years ago, and a little girl, crying over the basket of faded violets that she could not sell?"

"Alice! surely—"

"And a brave, frank boy, whose eyes of pitying kindness shone on me just as yours are shining now? I was the little flower girl, Frank—do you wonder that my heart made answer to the first pleadings of your love?"

"Then you are not Mr. Harrington's daughter?"

"Only the daughter of his love and protection."

And Frank Tremayne, holding Alice's hand in his own, felt that his love was safely anchored in the haven of her heart.

So the chance seeds dropped on the pavements of Broadway sprang up and blossomed in the sunshine of after years.

IS THE GRIP COMING?

Everything Indicates Its Speedy Approach—What the Indications Are Observed in It Abroad.

Reports from Europe which are appearing in the papers show that the grip has broken out in a most violent form in England, and the indications are that it is commencing its fourth annual tour of the world. The physicians there in America report many people suffering from symptoms which indicate the coming on of this terrible scourge. While there may not as yet be an epidemic, there are enough cases and enough serious cases to demand the greatest care and caution. The proverb, "In time of peace prepare for war," is one of the most valuable sayings ever uttered. The grip, with all its uneasiness, with all its seriousness, with all its danger, can be prevented, if taken in time, and if people properly prepare for it.

There is but one way to prepare for the coming on of the grip and that is to tone up the system, build up the energies, strengthen the life, and thus avoid its attacks by being thoroughly prepared for them. This cannot, however, be done except in one way. That way is by the use of some pure stimulant, which will keep the vital forces, increase the circulation and strengthen the life generally. There is, however, but one pure medicinal stimulant known to the medical world or the American people. That stimulant has been before the public for years, and is exceedingly popular with both men and women. It is Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. It is not an ordinary whiskey, but a pure medicinal one. Its popularity is wonderful, and it is due entirely to the fact that it is so superior in every way. For preventing the coming of the grip it is unequaled, for it fortifies the system to withstand its attacks. Care should be taken that no druggist or grocer sells you some other whiskey which he may claim to be just as good. There is nothing which can take its place.

EMERALDS DECREASING.

Only a Few Places Where These Gems are Found Now.

Emeralds are said to be steadily disappearing. In the '50s and '60s emeralds were the favorite jewels, and were worn strung on a thread like pearls. Such a string of emeralds was exhibited in a jeweler's window in Unter den Linden, and was estimated to be worth 12,000 marks. Now emeralds are no longer polished like diamonds. Faultless stones of a deep color have always been as valuable as diamonds. The reason of the scarcity of emeralds is the decrease in production in the Ural mountains.

Emeralds were first discovered on the right bank of the Tokowoier, near Katharineburg, in 1830, and in the first years the harvest was a rich one. Now the decrease, both in quantity and quality, hardly repays the labor. The harvest of emeralds in Labachtal, in the Salzburger Alps, has also proved disappointing, so that emeralds are now only to be had from Australia and Muso, near Santa Fe de Bogota in Colombia, in any appreciable quantity. The latter spot has been noted for its emeralds since the Sixteenth century.—The Queen.

INTELLECTUAL RECREATION.

Society women and girls are going in for intellectual recreation along with their delightful hobnobbing of "teas."

When the hostess writes "L. T." in the left lower corner of her invitation cards the guests know that she means to give a "literary tea." Then each one selects her mite of entertainment as a contribution to the general chatty information. Sometimes it is a newspaper clipping, a poem, or brief anecdote. Often a subject or topic of the day is presented with personal opinions pertaining thereto.

If the letters "H. L. T.," with a date, are written in the corner the guests know that a historic period will be reviewed over the dainty cups. Therefore, they provide themselves with a bit of information connected with that special era. The fashions of that time, the characteristics of the people, tragic events, amusing happenings, and reminiscences of personages, make up an interesting resume.

If the letters "A. T." are written in the corner of the card the tea will be of the nature of an "art chat." To be sure, a tribute of honor is given to genius while sipping the fragrant beverage. Likewise, there will be the jolliest exchange of ideas concerning the art of every-day living.

THANKSGIVING DINNERS

Will be made more than ever memorable with the assistance of the Martha Washington cook-book, which is sent free to any address on receipt of 10 cents in stamps by E. O. McCormick, G. P. & T. MISFIT MISFIT MISFIT

To Stand It, or . . . Not to Stand It. . . .

That's the question, whether it is nobler to suffer the outrageous profits asked by merchant tailors and so-called ready made clothing dealers, or take a walk up Madison street, and into the "Misfit" end them.—Modern Shakespeare.

Some people throw their cash away;
Quite often, if they knew it.
They pass our store and it does not pay,
Now don't YOU ever do it.
